U.S. CARRIES OUT A SHOW OF FORCE IN THE KOREA DMZ

Cuts Down Tree That Was Center of Fight in Which 2 Americans Were Slain

TROOPS AND JETS SENT

Operation Reported Forced by 300 Men, B-52's, F-4's and Copter Gunships

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21—The United States conducted a major show of force today in support of the cutting of a tree in the demilitarized zone in Korea where two American military officers had been killed by North Koreans.

According to Administration officials, the tree-cutting took place without incident at 7 A.M. today, Korean time (7 P.M. Friday, New York time), to deter North Koreans from interfering with the demonstration. American officials said a large-scale military demonstration had been ordered in South Korea.

Awareness in North Korea of the State Department's defense Department would disclose the details publicly, but officials said that the show of force included B-52 strategic bombers from Guam, Phantom and F-111 fighter-bombers, helicopter gunships, and about 300 armed soldiers from the United States and South Korea.

One official said that the aircraft were "just flying around" South Korean airspace and that North Koreans "had to know they were there." Likewise, the North Koreans could see the troops on the allied side of the Joint Security Area in the 40-foot popular was located. News of the cutting of the tree was warmly welcomed by the people of South Korea.

"New War Provocation" at Vail, Colo., Ron Nessen, White House press secretary, said that President Ford discussed the operation with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger yesterday in Kansas City for 45 minutes. Mr. Nessen said there and cut the tree.

According to Mr. Nessen, the President "approved the operation."

The latest incident in the demilitarized zone has provoked additional warnings from North Korea, which for the last three weeks has been accusing the United States and South Korea of having completed plans to launch an invasion of the North. In a broadcast over Pyongyang radio this morning, the

Bangkok Students Riot Over Return Of Ex-Strongman

By DAVID A. ANDELMAN
Special to The New York Times

BANGKOK, Thailand, Aug. 21—Rioting broke out in downtown Bangkok today between rival groups of students as the controversy over the sudden return a week ago of a former Thai military strongman continued to deepen.

At least one student was killed and 38 wounded by gunfire and plastic explosives in the brief but violent clash at Thammasat University before police moved in to break up the fighting.

Prime Minister Seni Pramoj, whose coalition Government is the focus of the conflicting demands that touched off today's demonstrations, called the student and labor groups and university leaders together in an effort to defuse the situation. But through the evening there was no clear resolution of the conflict.

The crisis for the four-month

Banks Cutting Investment In New York Real Estate

By CHARLES KAISER

The value of nearly all types of New York City property has declined in the last two years, leading many city banks to reduce their investments in New York real estate, according to a study of the city's lending institutions.

The bankers questioned by The New York Times cited overbuilding in the late 1960's, high real-estate taxes and the city's fiscal difficulties as reasons for the decline in office-building values. Rent control and deteriorating neighborhoods were called principal causes for the decline in prices of apartment houses.

Consequently, most city banks believe there are currently no good opportunities for investment in the construction of offices or apartments in New York.

The study was among dozens of findings in The Times' study, which asked the lending institutions to assess market conditions and suggest changes in

STORAGE SCHEME BILKS CUSTOMERS

Some Warehousemen Use Hidden Charges to Raise Costs Tenfold

By NATHANIEL SHEPPARD JR.

Each year hundreds of city residents are fleeced of their household furnishings, or are forced to pay exorbitant fees by unscrupulous storage warehouses that lure them with low estimates and then use hidden charges to increase costs as much as 10 times, according to state and moving-industry officials.

Their victims are usually poor or middle-income customers who are often already beset by other misfortunes, such as changes in economic status resulting from a death in the family, divorce or loss of employment. Sometimes they have been evicted and want to store their goods quickly for safekeeping while they search for new lodgings.

Typically, the officials said during interviews, the schemes work as follows:

The customer is given a modest estimate for moving his goods and is quoted a rate of between $30 to $45 a month for warehouse storage. Intra-state movers are licensed and regulated by the State Department of Transportation, but there is no licensing or regulation of storage warehouses.

But seldom is any mention

Fight for Water in West Grows

By GRACE LICHTENSTEIN
Special to The New York Times

DENVER, Aug. 21—The battle over water in the semiarid West, a battle that began when white men first started permanent settlements here, is fast reaching a critical stage that will determine the future of the dry sections of the region.

Recent controversies, which separately have hardly caused a ripple outside their own communities, together have made it clear that "there are going to be some very crucial direct confrontations between agriculture, municipalities and energy industries, and there's going to be fierce competition between the states," as Harris Sherman, Colorado's director of the Department of Natural Resources, phrased it.

Congress enacted a "wilderness" bill that stalled the powerful Denver Water Department in its perpetual quest for expanded water supplies.

The president of the Denver Water Board, a former United States Secretary of Agriculture, has been accused by an area newspaper of conflict of interest in his involvement in other water projects.

Threatens a Suit
Colorado has threatened to sue the Federal Government's Bureau of Reclamation for allegedly holding up Colorado water projects in order to benefit a gigantic Arizona program.

There has been a flurry of opposition to the same Central Arizona Project from critics who say it is not needed, costs too much and will flood an Indian reservation.

People call water "liquid gold" out here. Ever since 1822, when a compact was drawn up dividing the flow of the Colorado River and its tributaries among the snow-collecting upper states of Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico and the thirsty lower states of Arizona, California and Nevada, the politics of water has been a multi-

Carter Seeks to Establish Close Ties With Congress

He Plans to Help the Campaigns of Many Democratic Candidates to Must Support for Reforms

By RICHARD O. LYONS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21—Jimmy Carter, more than any Presidential candidate in recent years, is courting the allegiance of Congress before the November elections by going to unusual lengths in aiding Democrats seeking election to Congress. At the same time, he is discreetly soliciting the cooperation of key committee chairmen and party leaders on Capitol Hill.

The power changes in Congress will be the most extensive in years, involving changes in the Democratic leadership of both houses, 50 changes in chairmanships and perhaps 100 new members. Because of this, Mr. Carter cannot take Congressional cooperation for granted and he is seeking to head off problems long before they may arise.

Representative Al Ullman of Oregon, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, conferred with Mr. Carter for four hours on Wednesday. He said that the Democratic Presidential candidate "already is deeply concerned about getting Congress and the executive branch into a harmonious arrangement."

"He is very well aware that Congressional cooperation is the key to his whole program," Mr. Ullman said, adding that Mr. Carter has listed "quantum changes" in Federal programs on taxation, the Federal bureaucracy, health insurance and welfare as his major reform proposals.

Mr. Carter, along with nearly all the Democratic political experts, assumes that even a successful Presidential campaign will not dramatically raise his party's majorities in both houses and that the ideological divisions within Congress will remain about the same.

Thus, to bring about the more controversial legislative and administrative reforms he is proposing as campaign issues, Mr. Carter and his aides feel

CARTER TO STRESS CAMPAIGN IN AREAS OF FORD STRENGTH

Opening Labor Day Speech to Be in Warm Springs, Retreat of Roosevelt

MAIN STRATEGY HINTED

No Threat Appears Felt in the South or Its Adjacent Border State Regions

By JAMES T. WOOTEN
Special to The New York Times

AMERICUS, Ga., Aug. 21—After opening his Presidential campaign with a Labor Day speech in Warm Springs, Ga., Franklin Roosevelt's favorite retreat, Jimmy Carter plans to focus his pursuit of the White House on states where President Ford seems strongest, an aide said today.

In the first look at the Democratic candidate's geographic strategies, Jody Powell, his press secretary, said here today that major investments of time and money would be made in those areas "that look to be the most hotly contested, from California, running through the industrial midlands, up into the Northeast."

Such an approach would seem to confirm what Mr. Carter has been tentatively suggesting for several days now, that he feels no threat from President Ford here in the South or in its adjacent border regions and does not plan to extend himself greatly in those areas.

Alternative Prepared

Adding substance to that theory, Mr. Powell said today that Florida and Texas, where Mr. Carter won Democratic primaries, were "not quite in the category" of states "hotly contested" by the Republican ticket.

Moreover, Mr. Powell's preview of the Democratic thrust this autumn reflected the candidate's response to Mr. Ford's selection of Senator Robert J. Dole of Kansas as his Vice-Presidential running mate.

Had the choice been Ronald Reagan, John B. Connally or Senator Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee, all of whom are regarded as substantially more formidable in the South than Mr. Dole, Mr. Carter was prepared to answer the challenge with a spirited Southern campaign.

Will Speak Tomorrow

The choice of Warm Springs, the tiny Georgia village where Mr. Roosevelt died 31 years ago, was announced by Mr. Powell on the eve of a four-day trip by Mr. Carter to the West Coast and Iowa, a foray designed to reinforce his image in those areas.

He will speak in Los Angeles on Monday, Seattle on Tuesday and Des Moines on Wednesday before returning to his home in Plains, eight miles from this city.

The Carter forces chose not to begin his campaign at a traditional Labor Day rally in Cadillac Square in Detroit because of the city's recent riots.

South African Blacks Denounce Regime

By JOHN F. BURNS
Special to The New York Times

JOHANNESBURG, Aug. 21—The leaders of South Africa's tribal homelands, representing nearly half the country's 18 million blacks, said today that the action of Prime Minister John Vorster's Government to

The unrest in black townships showed that the only language they were prepared to listen to was violence.

A strong condemnation of the apartheid system, the homeland leaders demanded full human rights and rejected government concessions that could no longer satisfy the aspirations of the blacks.

After a meeting at a Johannesburg hotel, the group demanded an early meeting with Mr. Vorster to discuss the unrest which has cost at least 250 lives. It said the meeting should be followed by a national conference, to be attended by the dozens of black leaders detained by the security police since the trouble began.

Hudson W. Ntsanwisi, convener of the meeting, set the tone earlier by describing the Government's arrest of more than 170 black leaders as "jackboot tactics." Mr. Ntsanwisi is the chief minister of Gazankulu, one of the nine homelands, which together account for 8.5 million people.

"Jackboot Tactics" Assailed
"We believe that this is a time for penitence for all whites in South Africa," the homeland leaders said in their statement. "What has happened to our country is a result of their failure to observe the fundamental religious and ethical teaching such as contained in the words: 'Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men do to you, do ye even so to them.'"

The meeting was attended by senior officials of seven of the nine homelands, including Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, leader of the 4.8 million Zulus, the largest tribal group. Not represented were the Transkei, which is cooperating closely with the Government prior to becoming independent on Oct. 26, and Swazi, a territory on the country's northeastern border.

Statement Important
The statement was considered significant since the homeland leaders are considered by the Government to be the authentic representatives of the blacks. Under the separate development policy espoused by the Government, blacks are expected to renounce political and social rights in the country at large in return for emancipation in the homelands, primitive areas that constitute 13 per cent of the country's area.

Calling South Africa "our beloved country, the land of our birth," the homeland leaders criticized the destruction wrought by young demonstrators, who have razed hundreds of government buildings. But the black leaders coupled this with a condemnation of the police for having responded violently—with automatic weapon fire—to what they described as

The United States conducted a major show of force in support of the cutting of a tree at the spot in the demilitarized zone in Korea where two American army officers were killed Wednesday by North Korean troops. Those officers were attacked while conducting a tree-pruning operation. Officials in Washington said that the military display was intended to show American determination to use force if necessary if the North Koreans had tried to interfere with the tree-cutting—which took place without incident. American authorities deployed B-52 strategic bombers from Guam, F-4 Phantom and F-111 fighter-bombers, helicopter gunships, and about 300 troops. [Page 1, Col. 1]

Rioting broke out in Bangkok between rival groups of students as the controversy over the sudden return a week ago of a former military strongman continued to grow. At least one student was killed and 38 wounded by gunfire and plastic explosives in the brief but violent clash at Thammasat University. The police broke up the fighting. The crisis for the four-month-old coalition Government of Prime Minister Seni Pramoj began nearly a week ago when Field Marshal Prapas Charusathien, the former deputy Prime Minister and the power behind Thailand's last military dictator, Thanom Kittikachorn, returned secretly from exile in Taiwan. Ex-Tokyo Transport Chief Arrested in Lockheed Case

By HIROTAKA YOSHIZAKI
Special to The New York Times

TOKYO, Aug. 21—Tomisaburo Hashimoto, a former Cabinet minister and a leading political elder, was arrested here today as the investigation of the Lockheed Aircraft bribery scandal moved deeper into the ranks of Japanese politicians.

Mr. Hashimoto, a 75-year-old former Transportation Minister, was charged with accepting a bribe of 5 million yen, or $14,000, to use his influence in the purchase of Lockheed aircraft by All Nippon Airways, Japan's largest airline company in terms of passengers, planes and flights.

It was the 18th arrest in the multimillion-dollar Lockheed scandal here and the third arrest of a politician. All three political figures held so far are in the governing Liberal Democratic Party.

Former Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka was arrested late last month and indicted on Aug. 16 on charges that he accepted $6 million in the 1960's to use his office to help Lockheed. Last night, Takayuki Sato, a former Deputy Transportation Minister under Mr. Hashimoto, was arrested on bribery charges.

Channeled Money Sought

Other arrests are expected as the prosecutors continue their efforts to trace the $12 million that the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation says it spent here to promote the sales of its TriStar jets and P3-C antisubmarine patrol planes.

One area yet to be fully investigated is the disposition of Lockheed money said to have been channeled through Yoshio Kodama, the power broker and ultrarightist who served as Lockheed's secret sales agent here. Mr. Kodama's doctors say he is too ill to undergo questioning.

In an unusual weekend move, Tokyo prosecutors took Mr. Hashimoto into custody this morning. His formal arrest came only three hours later, and his home was searched this afternoon. The elderly politician was then taken from the prosecutors' office to the Tokyo Detention House for further intensive questioning under provisions of the detention law, which allows authorities to hold a suspect for 20 days before a formal indictment is handed up.

Mr. Tanaka, who is now free on bail, spent twenty-two days in the same prison. Unlike that of the United States, the Japanese legal system does not allow for bail before indictment.

An Ally of Tanaka

Mr. Hashimoto, who was once a reporter for the newspaper Asahi Shimbun, is a close confidant and political ally of Mr. Tanaka, who headed the largest political faction in the ruling party.

Mr. Hashimoto has also served as Construction Minister. From July 1972 to November 1974, he was the secretary general of the Liberal Democratic Party, controlling fund-raising and managing personnel matters. In recent months, his political activity has been concentrated within the Tanaka faction, defending himself and his leader from growing suspicion over their involvement in the Lockheed affair.

Meeting With Airline Chief

The arrest papers charge that Mr. Hashimoto, who had jurisdiction over the nation's airlines as Transportation Minister, met with Tokujii Wakasa, president of All Nippon, in January 1971. The papers say that Mr. Hashimoto postponed government approval of importation of airplanes until Lockheed's production of 111-1011 Superstars could catch up with the competing McDonnell-Douglas DC-10.

The prosecutors charge that on return for this delay, Mr. Hashimoto received the Lockheed funds in November 1972 from Hiroshi Ito, an executive of the Marubeni Trading Company, Lockheed's official sales representative here.

The arrest of Mr. Sato brings the Lockheed scandal somewhat closer to Prime Minister Takeo Miki. The 48-year-old Mr. Sato belongs to the political faction of Yasuhiro Nakasone, Mr. Miki's chief political ally.

Meanwhile the Home Affairs Minister, Hajime Fukuda, noting the growing number of corruption cases on government levels, called yesterday for strengthened efforts to eradicate such corruption.

Today the Tokyo Metropolitan Police arrested Toshio Kanama, a Socialist member of Parliament, on charges that he had demanded $10,000 in political donations from a construction concern in exchange for not telling Parliament of scandal involving the concern.

A week ago Morie Kimura, former governor of Fukushima Prefecture, was indicted on charges that he had taken $27,000 in bribes from two real estate organizations. Mr. Kimura was a chairman of the National Governors' Association and the top adviser to the prefectural chapter of the Liberal Democratic Party.

Miki Meets With Chief Critic in Tokyo, But Is Unsuccessful in Party Unity Bid

By ANDREW H. MALCOLM
Special to The New York Times

TOKYO, Aug. 21 — Prime Minister Takeo Miki conferred again today with his chief political critic and challenger, Takeo Fukuda, in an unsuccessful effort to patch up the political split that widened this week within Japan's ruling Liberal Democratic Party.

The meeting took place at the end of a hectic week that saw some unusual political developments here, including jeering of the Prime Minister by members of his own party and the mounting drive to seek a party vote of no-confidence in Mr. Miki as leader of the Liberal Democrats.

There was a series of meetings of local and national party officials, elders and members of the Diet to discuss the political consequences of the Lockheed aircraft bribery scandal. Former Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka was indicted Monday for bribery in the scandal.

Mr. Miki, who heads only a major faction in his party, used the sessions to repeat his public appeals for thorough party reforms, for a special session of the Parliament to handle pressing fiscal legislation and then for a general election. "The final political settlement rests with the general election," Mr. Miki told 200 delegates from his party's provincial chapters. "Let us leave everything to the judgment of the people."

Resignation Demanded

Mr. Miki's opponents include the powerful factions of Mr. Fukuda, who is Deputy Prime Minister, of Masayoshi Ohira, the Finance Minister, and the now leaderless but angry faction once headed by Mr. Tanaka. They want Mr. Miki to resign his party leadership, and thus the Prime Minister's post, before the extraordinary session of Parliament, expected late this month or early in September.

"At first I thought it was good for Miki to investigate the Lockheed incident," Etsusaburo Shiina, the party vice president, said yesterday. "But a little flattery has gone to his head and now he believes he is the only one who can do it. But anybody can."

An earlier bid by Mr. Shiina to oust Mr. Miki failed when public opinion generally interpreted the move as an effort to halt the Lockheed investigations. Such political control of criminal probes has not been unknown in Japanese politics, party votes and reforming po-relies heavily on corporate support.

Mr. Miki has called on party members to display the political courage necessary to face the Lockheed scandal—which has now seen the arrest of 18 Japanese, including three prominent Liberal Democrats—and to reform the party structure to avoid other scandals.

Jeering Incident

These reforms, he said, include disbanding party factions, broadening participation in party votes and reforming political fundraising that now relies heavily on corporate support.

But when the Prime Minister suggested these reforms at a party conference Wednesday, his voice was drowned out by jeers. "That's nonsense," they said, "stop joking." "Shut up." "Are you an opposition party leader?"

Then on Thursday his opponents circulated a petition calling for a meeting during the coming week of the 393 Liberal Democrats who are members of the Diet. Today there were 277 signatures on the petition, including those of 14 of the 21 Cabinet ministers.

At the session, Mr. Miki's Liberal Democratic critics are expected to push for a vote of no confidence, which is usually a tactic employed by the opposition political parties. According to party rules, if more than two-thirds of the party members from Parliament attend the meeting, their votes will have the same power as a general party convention. And Mr. Miki's resignation as party president would be sought.

Because of the Liberal Democrats' majority in Parliament, election to their party's presidency has in the past been tantamount to selection as Prime Minister.

It is not customary in Japanese politics to openly attack fellow party members. Implication is preferred. Thus, the 71-year-old Mr. Fukuda talks of the need to "freshen" the party, and his supporters understand that as an attack on Mr. Miki. Mr. Fukuda has also been doing a little political fence-mending with past party adversaries. This week he visited the home of Shigeru Hori, an influential Liberal Democratic Party elder, and both agreed on the need for Mr. Miki's resignation.

China's Quake Enhances Stature of Premier Hua

By FOX BUTTERFIELD
Special to The New York Times

HONG KONG, Aug. 21—For all the suffering that last month's earthquake brought to parts of north China, it may have had one positive effect. It seems to have helped consolidate the position of Hua Kuo-feng, the relatively unknown party administrator who was unexpectedly picked as Prime Minister last spring to replace the late Chou En-lai.

With China facing so many other uncertainties, the impending death of a badly respected Chairman Mao Tse-tung, a series of vacancies in major party posts, and an unsettled political campaign, Mr. Hua's evident emergence as an effective leader is an important accomplishment.

At the time when Mr. Hua was chosen prime minister in April, after the day-long disturbance in Peking's Tien An Men Square by 100,000 people, many analysts believed that he was a last-minute compromise choice, a man of lesser rank and experience but the one acceptable to all sides.

Whatever the reason for Mr.

Hua's selection, events since the earthquake that struck Hopei Province on July 28 have revealed him as an apparently forceful and capable leader.

It was Mr. Hua who headed relief efforts. And it was Mr. Hua who led a delegation, two days after the initial tremor, to Tangshan, the devastated industrial city near the epicenter of the quake.

To underscore the point, a film clip of Mr. Hua's visit has been repeatedly shown on Chinese television.

Some analysts believe that his new stature and the populace's growing familiarity with him are reflected in a change in the terminology by which he has been identified in the press. Until recently he was always referred to as Hua Kuo-feng Tsung-ii, or Prime Minister Hua Kuo-feng. Last week the press agency, Hsinhua, began referring to him simply as Hua Tsung-ii, or Prime Minister Hua, a more familiar usage.

Chairman Mao is the only other leader regularly accorded this treatment.

Big Ben's Bad Ticker Gets More Time to Conalesce

LONDON AUG 21 (UPI)—Workmen repairing Big Ben, London's most famous symbol, have found more wrong with the old clock than they thought. They found a fracture in the main shaft which turns the hands of the 117-year-old clock, repaired in the tower above Parliament. Instead of restarting the clock this week, as scheduled, they said it would be out of action another week.

The clock broke down two weeks ago. Instead of its hour chimes, the BBC is using "Great Tom," the biggest bell of the St. Paul's Cathedral clock, on its broadcasts while Big Ben is repaired.

U.S. ACTION HAILED BY SOUTH KOREANS

Removal of Tree in Neutral Zone Called Fine Gesture of American Resolve

By SHIM JAE HOON

Special to The New York Times
SEOUL, South Korea, Aug. 21—South Koreans warmly welcomed the news today that a work group of the United Nations Command had cut down a tree near which two American military officers had been killed Wednesday by North Korean soldiers.

"It's a very fine gesture of showing American resolve," said Pak Chol, official spokesman for the governing Democratic Republican Party.

He said that the removal of the tree, in the Joint Security Area of the demilitarized zone separating North and South Korea, was a symbolic act to show the Communist North that more retaliatory acts could follow unless gestures to explain and compensate for the killings were provided promptly.

In Seoul, meanwhile, President Park Chung Hee held an emergency session of South Korea's National Security Council to discuss tension in the demilitarized zone. Official sources said the South Korean armed forces, along with the 41,000 American troops in the country, had been placed on an increased state of combat readiness.

The 600,000-member Korean armed forces are part of the United Nations Command, which the United States controls under a Security Council mandate stemming from the Korean war of 1950 to 1953. Thus, the South Korean forces are technically under United States operational control.

Explanation Demanded

The tense situation began Wednesday, when about 30 North Korean soldiers were reported to have axed to death the two United States officers and wounded nine Americans and South Koreans on a tree-pruning operation. The North Koreans have charged that the Americans instigated the fight, but officials here in Seoul believe it was planned by North Korea to focus attention on American troops and ultimately force their withdrawal from the Korean peninsula.

Yesterday the United States demanded that North Korea provide "explanations" and "amends" for what Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger termed the "premeditated act of murder." He said that the American response would be determined by North Korean action in the next few days.

Last night it was simultaneously announced in Washington and Seoul that a 40-foot Normandy poplar had been cut down. Its removal was reported to have been accompanied by a show of force, including troops and air craft. The tree had obstructed the American view of North Korean check-point.

Washington regarded its removal as a sign of American determination not to be intimidated. It was not clear, however, whether there would be additional American response to the killings.

In a broadcast, North Korea called the removal of the tree and the accompanying show of power a grave military provocation.

While the tree was being cut, the United States was ordering a Navy task force toward the area and massing planes and troops.

At the same time, the United States Ambassador, Richard L. Sneider cut short his home leave to return to Seoul this morning. On his arrival he went straight to the presidential office for an official briefing with President Park.

Tree Removal Hailed

In the Korean Parliament legislators heard an official South Korean version of Wednesday's slaying of the American officers. They were told that the axing of the officers took place under careful Communist planning. Nine other United States and South Korean soldiers were wounded when about 30 Communists guards near Paumunjom attacked with axes, ax handles and metal pipes, the legislators were told.

In official comment today in removal of the tree, Culture and Information Minister Kim Seong Jin said it was "necessary for the United States to show North Korea it was willing to come up with its mighty deterrent power to maintain peace here."

During the initial phase of United States reaction, a number of South Korean officials had expressed irritation over what they suspected would be mere expression of "protest" from Washington.

Today, when the Pentagon announced the tree cutting, they said it means tougher measures would follow. Reports of movement of the Seventh Fleet and F-4 squadrons were prominently displayed in the local press.

RIOTS IN BANGKOK OVER STRONGMAN

old Government of Mr. Seni began nearly a week ago when Field Marshal Prapas Charusathien, the former Deputy Prime Minister and the real, though hated, power behind Thailand's last military dictator, Thanom Kittikachorn, returned suddenly and secretly from exile in Taiwan.

Highly Emotional Topic

Both Marshals Prapas and Thanom were ousted in a revolution in October 1973 in which more than 70 persons, mostly students, were killed in nearly a week of fighting with the military.

The return of Field Marshal Prapas, a highly emotional topic, touched off student and left-wing demands that he be expelled immediately then, later, that he be arrested and tried for treason.

A "deadline" set by some of the students for the Government to take action passed at noon today and by early afternoon thousands of students gathered on the campus of Thammasat University, which is the center of most student activism.

While the left-wing students barricaded themselves in the university, haranguing the crowd, which included a number of leaders of Thailand's principal, though fledgling, labor unions, a group of right-wing vocational students known as the Red Gaurs gathered outside.

However, there were hints tonight of a compromise that could save the Government. When the possibility emerged that Marshal Prapas might be induced to leave the country before his seven days expire next Thursday.

Monsoon Rains Began

Suddenly, before polite could move in, plastic explosives were thrown into the university and pistol and automatic rifle fire followed.

Before either group of students was able to regroup, however, the monsoon rains that have defused several tense situations during the past week, began again and the students quickly dispersed.

Both Prime Minister Seni and King Phumiphol Aduldet postponed out-of-town trips they had planned for this weekend in an effort to reach a solution to the crisis, which some politicians have begun to call the most serious since the election of Thailand's first post-revolution democratic Government more than a year and a half ago.

This morning, former Prime Minister Kukrit Pramoj, a leading figure in the opposition Social Action Party, returned from a visit to the United States and Europe and seconded his party's call for the resignation of the Government of his brother, Mr. Seni.

Calls for Resignation

The opposition, ranging from the National Student Center of Thailand and the Socialist Party on the far left, through more moderate groups including the New Force Party and Social Action Party, have all demanded that Mr. Seni step down. They have charged that the Prime Minister, in allowing Marshal Prapas to stay for seven days of medical tests—his ostensible motive for returning—was an inadequate response to the situation and claimed that the Field Marshal was being "protected by influential people."

Indeed, the real motive for the return of Marshal Prapas is still not clear. Many moderate politicians and foreign observers, however, believe that it may have been designed to provoke the left and the students into actions that the right-wing and the military could use as an excuse for solidifying their hold over the Government.

How that might be done has never been made clear. Mr. Seni's four-party coalition Government is outwardly quite solid but it contains a broad spectrum of political forces that in tense confrontations—such as today's—can tend to fall apart quickly.

Some military and right-wing members of the Government would, according to a number of politicians, like to see some of its more liberal members expelled—particularly those elements that were believed to have been too eager for recent negotiations and compromises with the Communist regimes in Laos and Vietnam.

British Group to Investigate Assassination of Trotsky

LONDON, Aug. 21 (Reuters)—Britain's Trotskyists are setting up an investigation into the assassination 35 years ago of Leon Trotsky.

Trotsky was killed with an ice pick in Mexico City. Trotskyists always suspected that the assassin was working for a foreign government.

Alex Mitchell, editor of the Trotskyists' newspaper Newsline, said at a press conference: "We do not believe this mystery has been fully cleared up. We believe our investigations will be sensational."

SLAYINGS PLAGUE ARGENTINE JUNTA

Mass Killings Stir Wave of Revision and Demands for Effective Control

By JUAN de ONIS
Special to The New York Times

BUENOS AIRES, Aug. 21—The mass murder of suspected guerrillas by right-wing terrorists in Argentina has produced a wave of revision that puts pressure on the military regime to impose effective control over all armed groups.

Lieut. Gen. Jorge Rafael Videla, president of the ruling junta, and the backers of his moderate political position, are angry about the adverse international impact and internal challenge to the junta caused by the anti-Communist extremists who killed 47 persons in two mass executions yesterday.

These killings at two deserted locations outside this capital indicated by their size the scope of the right-wing armed groups and the impunity with which they carry out abductions and killings.

Such actions are described by the military as uncontrolled in contrast to the anti-leftist campaign of the armed forces. This is aimed against guerrillas who began operating against the military and private businessmen during the regime of President Isabel Martinez de Peron, contributing to her downfall.

15 Leftists Killed

For instance, the Third Army Corps in Cordoba announced that it had killed or arrested 15 left-wing extremists this week who were identified by army intelligence as having planned a wave of terrorist bombings. An estimated 500 guerrillas have been killed in military and police operations this year.

But the action of the right-wing paramilitary groups against left-wing elements began under the government of Mrs. Peron, clearly with the support of elements of the federal police. In this group were gunmen armed by Jose Lopez Rega, former minister of social welfare and Mrs. Peron's political mentor, who led the Peronist movement's right wing.

Since the armed forces took power in March, these right-wing extremists have kept up their activity, again with strong evidence of police and military cooperation.

The choice of victims and the methods of these extremists have become a political problem, however, for General Videla and the leadership of the armed forces.

View on Targets Differ

The military moderates want to concentrate the antisubversion campaign against the guerrilla organizations, but the right-wing extremists want to turn this campaign against liberals, Jews, and any political sector that stands for democratic rule of law.

An example is the kidnapping Tuesday of Hipolito Solari Rivgoven, former senator of the People's Radical Party, with which the military junta has made efforts to maintain good relations, although all parties are in recess.

The issues of security and human rights raised by the action of the uncontrolled groups was stated by Msgr. Vicente Zaspé, Archbishop of Santa Fe, one of 30 bishops from Latin America and the United States, who were expelled from Ecuador last week while they were meeting there on pastoral problems.

'Insane Subversion'

Said Monsignor Zaspé at a mass: "The church will continue to condemn the insane subversion that is taking place in our continent, but it also condemns any violation, for whatever pretext, that takes place against fundamental human rights."

The Roman Catholic hierarchy has been pressing the military junta to act against the uncontrolled violence, particularly as a result of the killing of five Roman Catholic priests since March by right-wing gunmen.

The Buenos Aires Herald, an influential English language newspaper, said editorially that the killing of three Irish-Argentine priests after a bomb explosion at federal police offices in which 20 persons died, demonstrated that some mindless Frankenstein's monster was at work and that all killings could not be attributed to left-wing delinquents.

"These atrocities bear all the characteristics of provocation," said the editorial. "They recall the incidents that led up to the civil war in Spain. The one thing that stands in the way of the two extremes is the monolithic unity of the armed forces. But that massive strength must be mobilized to fight a war on two fronts. Terrorism cannot be fought with counterterrorism. Terrorism can only be fought with the force of law."

Trend Toward the Ordination of Women by Anglicans Impedes Unity, Pope Tells Archbishop

ROME, Aug. 21 (AP)—The Vatican newspaper has published an exchange of letters between Pope Paul VI and the Archbishop of Canterbury in which the Pope says the trend toward women priests in the Anglican faith is an obstacle to unity between the churches. Archbishop Frederick Donald Coggan started the exchange with a letter dated July 9, 1975, in which he asked the Pope for his views on the movement within the Anglican Church toward the conviction that there are no fundamental objections, in principle, to the priestly ordination of women. The Archbishop said he was concerned that such a trend would hinder progress toward unity. The Pope responded with a letter dated Nov. 30, 1975, in which he stated the Roman Catholic position that "it is not admissible to ordain women to the priesthood for truly fundamental reasons." He cited the example of Christ in choosing only men as apostles and the constant practice and teaching of the church. "We must recognize with regret that the new road taken within the Anglican communion to admit women to the ministerial priesthood cannot fall to introduce into this dialogue between the churches an element of serious difficulty which all those involved in the dialogue must seriously take into account," the Pope wrote. Archbishop Coggan wrote again on Feb. 10, 1976, and said, "We believe that unity will manifest itself in a legitimate diversity of traditions." He said he hoped the different positions on women priests and other matters might be a source of mutual stimulation rather than disunity. The Pope's final letter was dated March 23, 1976, the 10th anniversary of his historic meeting with Archbishop Coggan's predecessor, Archbishop Michael Ramsey. He said he hoped to meet personally with Archbishop Coggan as well. But the Pope spoke again of his "sadness in coming across this new obstacle, this menace on our path." However, he praised the "spirit of frankness and trust" implied in the dialogue and said he hoped a way would be found to remove all the obstacles to unity. Women have been ordained in the Episcopal Church, the American branch of Anglicanism, in defiance of American bishops. The Canadian Church has sanctioned ordination of women. Various organizations of nuns and lay women within the Roman Catholic Church have advocated a change in the church's attitude toward women priests, but the Vatican has strongly rejected their appeals.

Two Pleaded in Extortion

BOSTON, Aug. 20 (AP)—Two Massachusetts state senators pleaded not guilty Friday to charges that they extorted $50,000 from a New York consulting firm in connection with a state investigation of that firm. Senators Joseph J. DiCarlo, Democrat of Revere, and Ronald McKenzie, Republican of Burlington, entered their pleas before United States Magistrate Rudolph Pierce, who set bail for both men at $1,000 without surety.

Jewish Leader Accuses Russian of Anti-Semitism

By IRVING SPIEGEL
The head of the 500,000-member B'nai B'rith has sharply criticized a prominent Soviet lecturer and writer as "promoting uninhibited anti-Semitism" in his Government-sponsored activities.
David M. Blumberg, president of the organization, identified the Russian as Dr. Valery Yemelyanov of Moscow in an interview last week at B'nai B'rith headquarters in Washington. Mr. Blumberg described him as the "most outrageous big-lie specialist against Jews we've learned of in recent years."
The B'nai B'rith president said that Dr. Yemelyanov was a member of the Zanie (Knowledge) Society, "an important Society agency which conducts public lecture programs, an effective propaganda method in the Soviet Union."

Mr. Blumberg charged that Mr. Yemelyanov "has disputed Judaism as the source of monotheistic religion, castigated the Torah (Hebrew Bible) as the 'blackest book created in the entire history of mankind.'"
The Jewish leader also said that the Soviet specialist has contended that "80 percent of the economy and 95 percent of the mass media in the capitalist world are Zionist-owned."
Mr. Blumberg said that Dr. Yemelyanov's activities were being exploited by the Palestine Liberation Organization. He cited a long interview published in Palastin al-Thawra (Free Palestine), a Beirut-based P.L.O. monthly, in which Dr. Yemelyanov defined Zionism and anti-Semitism as "two sides of the same medal."
The Soviet lecturer accused the departed Soviet author, Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn, and the dissident physicist, Andrei D. Sakharov, of being "agents of World Zionism."
Mr. Blumberg said his organization had learned of Dr. Yemelyanov's activities from Soviet Jewish dissidents and also from publications. He said that recent Soviet emigres had advised B'nai B'rith that propaganda lectures "are a powerful force in the Soviet Union, much more believable to audiences than the press."

Yonkers Candidate Appeals Adverse Ruling on Petitions

YONKERS, Aug. 21 (UPI)—A candidate seeking the Democratic nomination in the 23d Congressional district, covering parts of Westchester County, including Yonkers, and the North Bronx has appealed a judge's decision that took him off the Liberal Party line, a campaign aide said yesterday.
The candidate, J. Edward Meyer, lost his Liberal Party designation yesterday when Justice Harold Hughes of State Supreme Court in Albany ruled that his petitions fell short by four signatures.
An Appellate Division hearing is scheduled for Aug. 30, said Paul Francis, a Meyer campaign aide. If the appeal fails, there will be no Liberal party candidate in the general election Nov. 2

Bar Mitzvah Fete for the Sons of Israeli War Dead Stirs Emotions

By WILLIAM E. FARRELL
Special to The New York Times

KFAR HABAD, Israel, Aug. 16—In a field of dry reddish soil, some 5,000 Israelis gathered at dusk to pay tribute to 80 honored guests discernible by their youth and their white skullcaps.

For the ninth consecutive year, the residents of this farming community near Tel Aviv were hosts at a bar mitzvah celebration for sons of Israeli soldiers killed in the numerous military actions that have marked this nation's short and tumultuous history.

Reminders of war here are commonplace. Monuments to the fallen sit on sun-baked hillsides, gleaming in their newness. Ditches next to roads contain the rusting wreckage of tanks and other armament deliberately left there to remind the nation of its precarious existence.

The celebration in this settlement of Orthodox Jews belonging to the Lubavitcher Sect—one that has its headquarters thousands of miles away in Brooklyn—was marked by emotions that oscillated between frenetic joy and quiet sadness.

A bar mitzvah is usually a joyous ritual, marking a 13-year-old boy's attainment of his religious maturity. It is a time at which a father ceases under Jewish law to be responsible for the sins his son may commit.

Hardly any of the youths who participated in the time-honored rite of passage here belong to the strict Lubavitcher Sect. But under the circumstances it did not matter. The Lubavitcher elders bent their own canons for the occasion and permitted women to sit with men during the ceremony, something that is normally forbidden.

Most of the gathering happily consumed fruit, cake, soda and brandy spread before them. Guests such as Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin were offered quality vodka generously decanted by the head of Kfar Habad, Shlomo Maidanchik, a locomotive engineer.

A number of the youngsters, who started out looking tense and later looked a little bored when a speech ran too long, quaffed cups of dark malt beer incongruously followed by cookies.

The speeches were somber. The music was joyful. A number of the Lubavitcher men started to dance and gradually worked up to an ecstatic pitch that infected the crowd.

Vases of wildflowers jumped on picnic tables that were being pounded in time to the music.

A man, his eyes filled with tears, turned to a stranger and said: "This is a very sad occasion. But never mind, the mothers are here and so are the sons."

Sons of Israeli soldiers killed in action at a mass bar mitzvah celebration in Kfar Habad.

East German Pastor's Suicide Reflects Church Issue

EAST BERLIN, Aug. 21—The case of a Protestant pastor who set himself on fire to protest Communist repression of religion has focused fresh attention on the conflict between church and state in East Germany.

Hundreds of persons watched in horror last Wednesday as the Rev. Oskar Brusewitz poured gasoline over himself and lighted up in flames on the busy market square of Zeitz, an industrial town in Saxony.

The pastor, who suffered critical burns, carried two posters condemning communism. One said, "The churches accuse the Communists of oppressing young Christians." The action left both the state authorities and the church in embarrassment.

Neues Deutschland, the East German party daily, said that Pastor Brusewitz was "an abnormal and sick man who suffered from delusions." Church officials acknowledged that the clergyman had been left alone in his troubles with local Communist authorities.

The event and its aftermath indicated that a wave of public protest was under way. Two clergymen, friends of Pastor Brusewitz, appeared at the East Berlin studios of West German television networks to explain how desperation had driven their colleague to his step.

Until now, East Germans generally have not openly expressed any opposition they might feel toward the Communist regime, for fear of harming themselves or their causes. Recently, however, many who are seeking exit permits or who have other complaints have been sending letters to Western civil rights institutions and news organizations asking for help in having their cases publicized.

A group of 33 persons from

Riesa in Saxony sent a petition to the West German Society for Human Rights saying that they wanted to arouse public opinion in the world to gain permission to emigrate.

Religious denominations, the Protestant and the Roman Catholic churches as well as the small Jewish communities, are allowed to conduct services in East Germany, but their influence on the young and the part they can play in public life have been reduced more and more. Young believers are warned against undergoing religious instruction and are frequently barred from higher education.

Pastor Wolf Dieter Zimmermann of the West Berlin church said confrontations had taken place at the local level where clergymen often met with derision and ostracism from the party authorities.

In despair several hundred Protestant pastors have asked for permission to leave the country, but in their cases it is the church that is opposed. Since last winter, church leaders have told clergymen to stay in East Germany because their communities need them.

Last year, the East German authorities gave exit permits to 10,274 persons, allowing them to renounce their citizenship and cross the border to West Germany lawfully. Tens of thousands of others are still waiting among them the group from Riesa.

A Traveler Loses Clothes While He's Wearing Them

BUFFALO (AP)—Russell G. Warner of North East, Pa., fell asleep in the men's room at a bus terminal here. When he awoke, he was no longer wearing his shoes, jacket, hat or sweater, the police said.

He sighted his wallet, minus $15, on the floor as he headed downstairs to the waiting room.

Warner said he had been sitting in the men's room at the terminal for about 15 minutes before he fell asleep. He awoke to find his shoes, jacket, hat and sweater missing.

He reported the loss to the police, who searched the area but found nothing.

Many in Soviet Take Up Knitting for Profit to Supply People in Arctic, but Regime Does Not I

By CHRISTOPHER C. WREN
Special to The New York Times

MOSCOW, Aug. 21—It was not the clack of knitting needles but the ensuing rustle of ruble banknotes that disturbed the Soviet authorities. A craze for knitting has swept the foothills of the Northern Caucasus, motivated less by pride of craftsmanship than by hunger for profits.

In communities from Stavropol to Karachayevsk, the knitting bug has bitten teachers, their pupils, mail carriers, agronomists, veterinarians, even proud Caucasian mountain men who once left knitting to the women.

"There was a time when only grandmothers were engaged but their monopoly has been broken," the newspaper Pravda recently said in reporting the craze.

The sweaters, shawls, stockings and snug caps have not been turned out for home consumption but, it seems, for more lucrative markets in the Far North, where warm woolen clothing can command prices that have earned a knitting family enough to buy a new Zhiguli car in a season or two. Authorities have been unsure what to do about it since knitting is in itself quite legal.

In theory, there is no reason for private enterprise to flourish outside the Soviet state economy. The criminal code even provides up to three years' imprisonment for anyone found guilty of being a commercial middleman. Yet some activities are condoned because the state-controlled economy cannot fill the gap.

The inadequate or shoddy supplies of many consumer goods and services have encouraged more than a few Soviet citizens to turn a fast ruble by offering a better alternative.

A man named Lipets became an underground millionaire by manufacturing and marketing high-quality shoes from a basement factory, though the state produced nearly 700 million pair of leather footwear last year. He employed as many as 15 cobblers and sold the shoes for up to $160 a pair. The customers were apparently satisfied but the police were not and arrested him for economic crime.

Most of those competing with the state hold down regular jobs. It was disclosed last year that moonlighters in the Central Asian city of Frunze included a doctor who repaired cars at night and a geologist who drilled wells for farmers on the side. In Moscow, private automobile owners and government chauffeurs alike sometimes hire out their vehicles on the side as gypsy cabs.

Lack of Tombstones

In the Chernovtsy region of the Ukraine, local artisans even stepped in to make up for the lack of grave markers. In the village of Stavanchi, one craftsman reportedly made 385 tombstones in his kitchen over seven years before police investigators charged him with using some cement taken from a state construction company.

The knitting boom in the Northern Caucasus has appeared no less profitable. In the hamlet of Khasaut-Grechesky, "where the number of houses could be counted on one's fingers," Pravda said, knitting inhabitants made $644,000 in a year. A veterinary worker and his wife in Marukha were said to have earned more than $13,000 in three months.

"Strong healthy people are quitting jobs, plunging into knitting with an overwhelming passion," the newspaper complained. "They knit at home, in the street, during a movie at the club, in a store and in any other situation with enviable speed. Only sleep trimmed to a minimum stops the flashing of the hools."

Entrepreneurs, their suitcases jammed with knitwear, have been flying to Murmansk and other northern cities to sell off the handwork at speculative prices, Pravda said. Others, more timid, have been mailing parcels of their knitting C.O.D. to randomly selected post offices in the Far North, enclosing price lists and beseeching the local postmaster to send back the sales proceeds.

Guess what's
"le news hot"
in Paris?

Good ole Coach bags from the
good ole USA.

Sounds like a man-bites-dog story, doesn't it? Here we are with French fashions making page one of The New York Times, and New York leatherware making a fashion hit in Paris.

That's what makes the fashion business exciting. If you're good, the word gets around; all around the world. And, as you well know, Coach® bags are very good indeed.

Most importantly, the leather is good. Remarkable, in fact, because every one of these bags is made of completely natural, uncorrected, top-grain, glove tanned cowhide. (Basically the same leather used in baseball gloves. And you know how soft-but-tough a fielder's mitt is.)

And the finishing is good. Coach bags are not coated with paints and pigments. They're tenderly treated so that the scars, scratches, veins etc. which are characteristic of full-grain leather show up in all their natural beauty.

The wearability is good. You can hug your Coach bag. You can squeeze it and squash it. It was born to be worn every day. This leather will only grow gradually darker to a rich burnished glow.

Now about the styles. Best to tell you first what they're not. They're not exotic and they're not "trendy." They're soft and casual and perfect with this fall's important soft-sportswear look. Coach shapes have continuity. They're so good they don't change much, so that, 10 or 15 years from now, if you should want to replace a favorite, you'll probably find its twin sister still "on the line."

But here's what we think is best about Coach bags. They're classics. Carefree, comfortable American classics, as easy going as blue jeans. No wonder they're a prize in Paris. And you don't have to hop an SST to Europe to bag a Coach. Just zip in to Altman's. Our Coach Leatherware Shop on the main floor was going strong long before this new one opened in Paris.

P.S. Please note the prices. We believe they're excellent for such superior leather and craftsmanship.

TERRORISM'S END IS SEEN IN MEXICO

Police Cite Leader's Death — Communist League's Roots Are Questioned

Special to The New York Times
MEXICO CITY, Aug. 21—The death of Mexico's best-known urban guerrilla leader has led the police to forecast an early end to a wave of terrorism that included, early this month, the attempted kidnapping of a sister of President-elect Jose Lopez Portillo.

According to the police, David Sarmiento Jimenez, 28-year old head of the Communist League 23d of September, died in a gunbattle a week ago Wednesday after guerrillas tried to intercept a car carrying Margarita Lopez Portillo. Two other persons were also killed.

This week Mexico City's Chief of Police, Gen. Daniel Guierrez Santos, asserted that "The League is crumbling and is almost finished." He noted that two other rebel leaders, Carlos Gorostiola Torres and Miguel Angel Crespo Diaz, died in recent weeks.

The League, named after a guerrilla foray on Sept. 23, 1965, in Chihuahua state has been blamed for numerous terrorist acts since 1974, including the kidnapping this May of the daughter of the Belgian Ambassador here and the mass murder of more than 40 police officers.

Communist Roots Questioned
Despite its activities, the League remains so much a mystery that some Mexicans doubt that it is an authentic Communist revolutionary movement. Politicians and analysts of these matters suggest that it might even be sponsored by conservatives trying to provoke repression of the left.

What is most puzzling is that while the existence of the League has long been known to the police, its political or propaganda activities among students and the urban poor have been minimal. It has concentrated almost entirely on terrorism.

The League was formed in 1973 from the remnants of several small urban guerrilla groups that had begun operating and in the cities of Guadalajara and Monterrey shortly after President Luis Echeverria Alvarez took office in December 1970.

In 1974, however, Government forces killed the country's main rural guerrilla leader of the time, Lucio Cabanas, who had been a schoolteacher, and killed or arrested most known leaders of the Communist League.

Then last year the Government once again began blaming the League for assaults and kidnappings throughout the country. "Every time a car is stolen, it's the work of the League, a Government source remarked skeptically a few months ago.

In May of this year, for example, while the police once again accused the League of the kidnapping of a few months ago.

In May of this year, for example, while the police once again accused the League of the murder of eight bodyguards, members of a family that those men had been assigned to protect said privately that they believed a business feud to be the motive.

In June, several former in Monterrey issued a statement denouncing the group's activities and declaring that the League was carrying out counter-revolutionary actions.

Mexico's small Communist Party, anxious to gain respectability among the middle class, stated in June that the League was not a genuine Marxist-Leninist organization and was clearly inspired by rightist forces.

Hired to Fight Rightists?

Mr. Sarmiento Jimenez's jailed brother, Carlos, added to the confusion when, after he identified the body, he told reporters that the League had been formed with the support of the Government to eliminate paid rightist thugs who were terrorizing schools and universities.

One report, unpublished in Mexico, was that Mr. Sarmiento Jimenez was the head of the Mexican Army in the First Military Camp in Mexico City at least five days before the attempt to kidnap Miss Lopez Portillo.

Given the secretive nature of Mexican politics, reports of this kind can never be properly verified. They only spawn more rumors about the genesis of the terrorism.

Political analysts here seem to agree, however, that whether the League is leftist or rightist, the effect of its activities has been to subject nonviolent leftist groups to greater pressure from the Government and to encourage conservatives who would like to see a more rightist line followed by the next administration, which takes office Dec. 1. These analysts also link the wave of terrorism to a struggle for power that inevitably comes during the final year of every government.

Britain and Belgium Impose New Drought Rules

LONDON, Aug. 21 (AP)—With their lands parched and reservoirs running dry, Britain and Belgium have announced stiff new measures in an effort to stop their people from wasting water during the worst drought in hundreds of years.

The Belgian Government announced yesterday that it would impose jail-terms and fines on those violating regulations prohibiting the watering of lawns, washing of automobiles, filling of swimming pools and washing of sidewalks. Belgium, with no substantial rain in eight months, is having its worst drought in a century.

The fines range from the equivalent of $100 to $1 million, but a Government spokesman said that he doubted any court would impose a $1 million fine except for something grave enough to threaten human life on a large scale.

In Britain, authorities have announced plans to cut water supplies to homes in Wales to keep factories running and to avoid a major economic crisis.

Britain's worst drought in 250 years.

The weather bureau in London said that rainfall in the southern half of Britain has been below normal for 15 months.

Officials of the Thames Water Authority, which supplies most of London, said that there is only enough water in the capital to last 50 days, half the normal supply.

The Welsh Water Authority said that starting on Monday a million people in South Wales will have their water shut off for 17 hours a day. A four-hour extension of a shut-off period that has been in effect for nearly two weeks.

Fines of $720

"It seems that many people just have not realized the gravity of the situation," a Water Authority spokesman in London said. "It may be that we need to make a few examples to get the message across."

Water-conservation measures now in effect provide for fines of $720 if citizens are caught watering lawns, washing cars, filling swimming pools or running ornamental fountains.

The Welsh Water Authority's chief, Dr. Harry Cram, explained that the cutback in water to homes is being made under emergency regulations passed by Parliament earlier this month. He added that it meant that the 50 percent cost to industry that had been scheduled for Sept. 1 can be postponed for two weeks.

Industry Secretary Eric Varley has reportedly warned government leaders that hundreds of factories face shut-downs or three-day work weeks soon if emergency measures are not taken.

The National Farmers' Union has appealed for heavy government aid to keep farmers from going bankrupt after widespread crop failures.

ESIAN RUSE AID REPORTED aid to Have Struck guise as Blacks

By The New York Times
 A. Aug. 21—The Rhodesian military that were reported at least 800 men they destroyed a camp supported camp refugees in Mozambique wore Mozambique uniforms, according to a report made public today by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. The report said the soldiers had the same weapons as Mozambique guerrillas, and were riding in vehicles with Mozambique registration plates. The Rhodesians had painted their faces black, the report said.

The report was telephoned to the United States by a spokesman, Prince Saad Khan of Pakistan, a representative of the United Nations. He said he had visited the camp at Nyazema, in the province of Manica, in Rhodesia. He said the soldiers were based on a hillside overlooking the Mozambique border. He said that he had seen the dead bodies of Mozambique guerrillas, two Mozambique soldiers, two Mozambique guerrillas, and a Spanish priest. He said that the bodies were likely to be higher up the hillside, because of the bush surrounding the camp. He said that the bodies of the wounded were scattered around the camp.

The report said that the camp was under the command of a Rhodesian soldier, Prince D. Smith. The report said that when he was at the camp previously, in 1973, there was no evidence of guerrilla activity there. The report said that the camp was one of the High Commissioner for Refugees to finance in 1973 for 25,000 Rhodesians who fled their country because they did not want to live under white-minority rule or out of fear of guerrilla activity.

On his visit, Mr. Idoyaga said that the camp was a "desolate" place with huts, bush huts, and warehouses. He said that there were ten mass graves, and that the graves had a "poisonous odor" and were covered by bulldozers. He said that there were bloodstains and bullet holes in the walls of the huts. He said that he saw what he described as a "horrific scene" in the camp. He said that he saw 13 vehicles, and that the vehicles were Mozambique near the camp. He said that the vehicles were advancing along the road, and that they were divided into three groups. He said that the first group began sabotaging the bridge across the road, and that the second group prepared an ambush. He said that the third group drove onto the bridge, arriving between 10 and 11 a.m.

He said that the Rhodesians had ambushed a vehicle from the local administration, and that they had killed two Mozambique guerrillas. He said that the two Portuguese and the Spanish were killed near the camp, and that the Rhodesians prevented them from leaving the camp, according to the report.

G IS RAISED HOUSING LOANS

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Rural families earning up to $11,200 a year will become eligible for housing loans from the Agriculture Department's Home Administration, the department has announced. The department said that the "adjusted" family income for applicants in the program had remained at $10,000 a year since March 1973. The department said that the income has been raised to $10,000 for the continental United States, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. The department said that the "adjusted" income is calculated by starting with the family income and then adding a 5 percent general allowance, a second allowance for each minor child, and a deduction for any working spouse that are recognized on tax returns. The department said that a family of four with a total income of $11,200 a year would qualify for a loan. The department said that the maximum loan amount is $8,000 in deductions for minor children would be added to the "adjusted" income to the $10,000 ceiling.

Text of the Statement Issued by the Representatives of the Blacks in South Africa

Special to The New York Times
JOHANNESBURG, South Africa, Aug. 21—Following is the text of a statement issued here today by leaders representing 8.5 million South African blacks:

We meet today in a time when South Africa has not yet discovered its fundamental unity, a common South Africanism and a common purpose for all South Africa today is bedeviled by the conflict between black nationalism and Afrikaner nationalism thus creating a highly dangerous situation.

We meet together also in response to the continuing cry of deep frustration and despair of our people throughout the Republic which has manifested itself since June 16, in death, destruction in the urban townships and rural areas in South Africa. We meet to express our deep concern at the future of this our beloved country, the land of our births; to draw attention to the existence of grievances affecting millions of our fellow black South Africans; and to suggest constructive and positive proposals to meet those grievances and to correct the injustices which exist at the present time. The welfare and grievances of our fellow blacks are our concern, wherever their geographical situation in the Republic may be.

Blames Government

We deplore the fact that the country today is in such dire straits, because of the shabby manner in which our representations to the Prime Minister, at two summit meetings we have had with him, on the 6th March 1974 and the 22d January 1975, here treated. If the republican Government had heeded our words of warning concerning the granting of permanent rights for urban blacks and the imposition of Afrikaans as a medium of instruction, amongst other things, this conflagration which engulfs the whole country would not have taken place. And while understanding the impotence of youth in its refusal to be pushed around from pillar to post by whites this conference of black leaders cannot condone the wanton destruction of property, schools and lives. Further, this conference deplores the violence unleashed by the police in response to peaceful and legitimate demonstrations by the students. The practice of the republican Government in continuing to deny fundamental human rights to blacks, until forced by confrontation, has shown to the country and to the world that the only language they are prepared to listen to is violence. In so doing they have dealt a severe blow to the philosophy of non-violence as a viable formula for change.

Changes Are Cited

Although some changes have taken place in South Africa, such as the opening of some hotels, libraries, parks and the loosening of sport policies, these are not seen by most blacks as representing fundamental changes, but are seen as mere window dressing for the show. Failure to implement the genuine aspirations of blacks as presented by black leaders has done great harm to the Government's recognized statutory bodies, and has given a lot of credibility to the accusations that these institutions, fostered on our people, are of no value.

We believe that this is a time of penitence for all whites in South Africa. What has happened to our country is a result of their failure to observe the fundamental religious and ethical teaching such as contained in the words: Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men do to you, do ye even so to them. Only if and when the republican Government faces up to the fact that a change of heart is more important to racial harmony than gifts, levished out of a Calvinistic duty, will there be any question of rapprochement between black and white in South Africa.

Appeal to Premier

In order to bring about that change that is now overdue in our country, we wish to make the following appeal to the republican Government as we have done repeatedly to the Prime Minister in the past:

1. Discriminatory legislation based on color and race must go, since this is an assault on the dignity of the black man.

2. The black man is permanent everywhere in this country, including the urban areas.

3. All the black leaders presently detained must be freed from detention or charged in a court of law.

4. The black leaders meeting here regard themselves and are considered by millions of their people as part and parcel of the liberation movement. It being so, we deeply regret the divisions within the leadership of black people at this moment of crisis. We want to emphasize that this is the time during which blacks must speak with one voice, whatever their differences may be on strategy.

5. Influx control regulations must go.

6. The Bantu administration boards must go, as they are considered by blacks as instruments of oppression.

7. Free and compulsory education for blacks must be introduced immediately just as is the case with whites.

8. We demand full human rights for blacks and not concessions, as concessions can no longer satisfy the aspirations of the black man.

9. If the Government continues to ignore reasoned and legitimate representations of black leaders for change, as they have done so far, they will be wittingly or unwittingly promoting the cause of violence.

10. The leaders here assembled, excluding Boputhatswana and the Transkei, wish to reiterate that they have no intention whatsoever of opting for the so-called independence, as we do not want to abdicate our birthright as South Africans, as well as forfeiting our share of the economy and wealth, which we have jointly built.

11. As responsible black leaders we urgently plead for a meeting with the Prime Minister to discuss the present state of unrest in the country. In addition we would also want to discuss with the Prime Minister the conference where the detained leaders will also be represented.

peaceful and legitimate demonstrations.

"The practice of the republican government in continuing to deny fundamental human rights to blacks, until forced by confrontation, has shown to the country and to the world that the only language they are prepared to listen to is violence," the black leaders declared. "In so doing they have dealt a severe blow to the philosophy of non-violence as a viable formula for change."

The group, which has been described as puppets by radical black leaders for cooperating with the Government in the development of the homelands, rejected the Government's offer of independence for their territories. Instead, they demanded changes that would amount to a complete abandonment of apartheid.

They said that concessions made by the Government in recent years were seen by blacks as mere window dressing. The concessions have included moves to opening some first-class hotels and restaurants to blacks, permitting limited interracial sport and desegregating some libraries, parks and museums.

Since the township disturbances began, the Government has made a number of additional concessions. It has abolished the compulsory use of Afrikaans in black schools, the issue that set off the violence, and expanded homebuying rights for the 5.6-million blacks who live in the townships. But senior ministers have insisted that the basic structures of apartheid will remain.

Unrest Is Continuing

Stone-throwing was reported to be continuing in the black townships outside Port Elizabeth, where 33 blacks lost their lives this week. Arson attacks on schools were reported from a number of townships, bringing the total damaged or destroyed by fire since June to more than 100. A police spokesman said the burning of the schools was a textbook guerrilla operation.

In Soweto, township leaders reported rumors of plans for a new attempt to stop commuters from going to work in Johannesburg. The plan, following similar attempts that kept up to three quarters of the 220,000 workers away from the city two weeks ago, was said to be scheduled to go into operation on Monday.

In the early hours of the day, a white couple driving on a road past Soweto were reported to have been attacked by a group of 20 black youths wielding bricks and screwdrivers. The couple were admitted to a hospital suffering from shock after the driver had produced a revolver and fired several shots.

 The accusation against the

 Dr. Aptheker suggested that he

JUSTICE BARS ACTION IN 2 SCHOOL CASES

WASHINGTON, Aug. 20 (UPI)— Associate Justice Potter Stewart has declined to intervene in two Ohio school cases before the Supreme Court.
 The cases involve a desegregation plan for Dayton schools and a state law providing for aid to religious schools.
 Justice Stewart refused to honor a request by the Dayton Board of Education that he block an order requiring every school in the system to have a racial balance deviating no more than 15 percent from the district's black-white ratio.

 The plan the board wished to delay was affirmed by the United States Court of Appeals, but is being examined by the full court for the Sixth Circuit on July 26.
 It resulted from a suit brought by black parents and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.
 Justice Stewart gave no reason for his denial of the bar-request or for his refusal to bar enforcement of Ohio's new law providing for aid to religious schools.
 Taxpayer opponents of the law had argued that, if payments were not blocked, a large part of the $33 million appropriated under the act would be lost in violation of the rights of the objectors.
 A temporary order against enforcement had been in effect for several months, but on July 21 a special three-judge Federal court in Columbus found the law constitutional under Supreme Court standards. The law was enacted last year in an effort to meet those standards.

Soaring Cost of Health Insurance Is Debated in Auto Contract Talks

By NANCY HICKS
Special to The New York Times

DETROIT—If you bought a new General Motors car last year, you paid about $160 toward the cost of health insurance for auto workers and their families. If you bought a 1975 Ford, about $119 of the price you paid went to finance the same item.

The 1976 figures will be higher at both companies, for auto workers' health insurance is the fastest growing labor cost in the country.

Not surprisingly, in view of such figures, health benefits, which are said to cost car makers more than steel, have emerged as one of the stickiest items to be resolved in the negotiations under way between the United Automobile Workers and the Big Three companies.

While the union is, as usual, seeking expanded benefits, the manufacturers are demanding that the workers accept reduced coverage and pay more of the cost of health care.

Whether the companies expect to win this point is not clear.

"We are telling the unions that what we really want to do is sit down and talk about this," said Victor M. Zink, director of Employee Benefits and Services for the General Motors Corporation. "We want them to know that we are not interested in any broadening of coverage as long as the present benefits continue without change."

Enforcing Controls

But the way in which the issue is resolved will tell much about future national efforts to enforce economic controls in health care while expanding services to the one-quarter of the American population that is considered to be inadequately covered now.

The questions in the negotiations between the manufacturers and the U. A. W., which are moving toward a Sept. 14 deadline, are the same as the following in the national debate:

over whether or when to enact a national health insurance program.

How much should be spent for health care? Chrysler, Ford and G.M. will spend $1.4 billion for health insurance for their workers this year, which comes to an average of $1,600 a family. The nation spent $118.5 billion for health care last year, 8.3 percent of the gross national product, or $550 for every man, woman and child.

What can be done about inflation in the health care sector? Without major increases in benefits, health insurance rates rose between 20 and 34.4 percent for the auto makers last year, while wages went up between 7 and 9 percent. Throughout the economy, health services have been rising about 50 percent faster than other items in the Consumer Price Index since wage and price controls were lifted in 1974.

How can costs be held down? The union, which has been the most vocal advocate of cradle-to-grave national health insurance, says the answer lies in federalizing the predominantly private system, setting fees and enforcing controls that are on the books but not always used. The companies contend that government confuses things, that the answer lies in the willingness of the community at large—workers, hospitals, doctors and industry—to make sacrifices and pay a little more.

"There is just so much a corporation can cover through its productive efforts," said Paul J. Ryder, assistant director of labor relations planning for the Ford Motor Company, which will pay $364 million for health insurance this year. "We have reached that point. We want relief."

Relief From Costs

What the companies want relief from is the cost of a broad range of health services that it buys for workers through Blue Cross and Blue Shield plans across the country. These include unlimited hospital care, extended nursing home care, drugs and dental services, in which the workers share costs, and diagnostic services. Regular visits to the doctor are not covered.

The union has no complaint with the companies' analysts or figures, but it is philosophically opposed to the proposed solutions.

"We say the major factors in controlling health costs are in the system, not in employer-employee benefits," said Melvin A. Glasser, who heads the benefits programs for the U.A.W.

The national health plan conceived and supported by the unions and endorsed by Jimmy Carter, the Democratic Presidential nominee, would, unionists say, save the auto companies some $187 million to $330 million a year.

U.A.W. officials argue that with health planning, better peer review and some setting of priorities for services, there would be economies as well as improved coverage. Dr. Eugene N. Feingold, head of the department of medical care organization at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, explains:

"At the present time, 40 percent of the health dollars go through government. Once all the money goes through, some budgeting agency will have to make some decision on whether to spend it on health care or B-1 bombers. Even within health care, it will have to decide whether to buy preventive dental services (which should reduce the later cost of dental care) or on coronary by-pass surgery, which is the most expensive service.

"There is no social mechanism to make those decisions now; they are made by default in the private market place."

Higher Cost Cited

The companies disagree. "Every time the union asked us to add something that was supposed to save money—out-patient psychiatry, home health care, convalescent care—it always ends up costing more," said Mr. Zink of G.M.

The companies say the answer lies in more "participation" by patients, seizing on a theme in a report this year from the Council on Wage and Price Stability. It said that a part of the baffling inflation in the health sector could be explained by the passive relationship of the patients, who watch physicians order services and watch insurance companies pay for them.

The employers, following the lead outlined in President Ford's budget this year, would ask the patient to pay a portion of his bill, discouraging trips to doctors and discouraging doctors from ordering unnecessary procedures that will have to be explained to patients.

Neither side expects to have its way, and both are working toward a compromise. They, with Blue Cross-Blue Shield of Michigan, are trying to start presurgical screening to reduce the number of unnecessary operations. Local doctors are opposed to the idea.

The union and the companies are also trying to hold to 10 percent the annual price increases allowed for doctors and hospitals.

Arkansas Seeking Voting Right Law For Former Felons

Special to The New York Times

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark., Aug. 21—The 30-year-old Attorney General-elect of Arkansas hopes to make the state the first in the country to restore the right to vote to all convicted felons who have completed prison or probation sentences.

William Clinton, who is a law professor at the University of Arkansas, said that he would push for enactment of legislation aimed at restoring civil rights to rehabilitated criminals when the Arkansas General Assembly convenes in January.

"When a judge or jury assesses punishment," he said, "it is usually contemplated that there will be an end to that punishment, except in instances of capital punishment or sentences of life without parole." While the United States Supreme Court ruled in 1972 that the continued denial of a convicted felon's right to vote is not cruel or unusual punishment, Mr. Clinton, a former Rhodes scholar and a graduate of Georgetown University and Yale Law School, said that he considered such continuing punishment a deterrent to total rehabilitation.

"Many persons found guilty of crimes do lead law-abiding lives," he added, "the law that denies them the right to vote is extremely difficult to enforce, especially when a former felon moves from one county to another or into another state. In effect on sort of a not participate of government." The young, an elect, an ack getter, won nomination w in a three-r spring. Unopposed election, Mr. C dinated Senat ern's Presiden Texas in 197 state promotir restore the ci rmer convicts, nating Jimmy dental campa GIVE SUMMER

Connecticut Plans To Return to Use Of Toll Machines

HARTFORD, Aug. 21 (AP)—The State Department of Transportation is switching back to automatic collection equipment at some highway toll booths to relieve traffic congestion.

The deputy transportation commissioner, William Wade Sr., said today that the new automatic equipment would be installed in 30 lanes at 10 toll plazas for use during non-commuter hours.

He said the automatic equipment would be installed along with high-speed gates to prevent toll evasions. Installation is to begin by Sept. 1.

The state did away with automatic equipment at 52 toll booths three years ago. Part of the reason for the change was that the Transportation Department wanted to combat a toll evasion problem that was resulting in the loss of about $300,000 a year.

Mr. Wade said the new machines with high-speed gates would reduce pollution caused by lines of cars waiting to pass through the toll lanes and would also protect against toll evaders.

The automatic lanes will be for cars only and will require exact change. A department official said that the state was planning to introduce commu-

cy Discards Plan for Safer Matchbook Covers, but Considers Other Requirements

Woman Bowler Reduces Activities

TON, Aug. 21 (AP) — One commissioner said that the childproof cover, and they makers have won Government made matchbooks position from the 10 United States manufacturers who make 25 billion matchbooks a year. The child-resistant cover they still face and thus make it easier for children to get at the matches. But the commission, which voted unanimously to drop the child-resistant feature, is still considering proposals to make matches extinguish automatic-ly after 15 seconds and to resist fragmentation. Those requirements would not be as costly to implement as matchbooks.

The other safety proposals would add only about $2.5 million to the $100 million that consumers and advertisers now pay for matchbooks, according to the study by Battelle Laboratories of Columbus, Ohio. Battelle's figures were markedly lower than estimates made by the Government's Council on Wage and Price Stability, which said in June that the safety standards would cost $68 million a year and add one-third cent to each match and cost more than $12 million in lost wages and liquidation and only 7.4 percent were expenses, as well as $3.5 million for unemployment compensation and welfare. The commission also said that there was no proof that child-resistant covers would reduce matchbook burns, which have closed in the past two years. The Battelle analysis said that five more companies would be put out of business. Price Stability said that 97 percent of those persons were re-

Manager of Reagan Campaign Wins Respect by Performance

By JON NORDEHEIMER
Special to The New York Times

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 21—Ronald Reagan lost his bid for the Republican nomination this week, but his campaign manager, John P. Sears, won the respect of those who watched the man maneuver through the hot days and long nights to keep alive the hopes of the former California Governor.

It perhaps gave some insight into the condition of the Republican Party that one of the brightest new faces to emerge at the convention was not an officeholder but a professional politician.

It was the deft performance of the 36-year-old Washington lawyer that kept the Ford forces off balance to the very end, even after Mr. Sears and his aides realized that the nomination was out of reach.

On Wednesday night, 24 hours after the nomination had really been decided by the loss of a key test vote on Rule 16-C, a rules change designed by Mr. Sears to shake loose Ford support, a prolonged demonstration after the name of Mr. Reagan had been placed in nomination created a suspicion in the Kemper Arena that John Sears was plotting another surprise.

Seated in his command-post trailer outside the hall, Mr. Sears, who had shown the party three weeks earlier when put together a proposed ticket pairing Ronald Reagan with Senator Richard S. Schweiker, was struck by a devilish notion.

"Hey," he said over the noise of the television monitors to about 20 others in the trailer, "why don't we get on the phones and tell our floor leaders we've decided to drop Schweiker and nominate Nixon for the Vice Presidency?"

A $13 Million Lost Cause
Gallows humor sustained the Sears crew of professional political workers through the long countdown that night that led to the nomination of Mr. Ford.

But when the last vote had been counted and the results so hard work and exhausting travel and about $13 million in campaign money had been certified as a lost cause, the tough men inside the trailer couldn't help themselves. The black humor that had sustained them for 24 hours gave way to silence and even tears.

The first indication of impending defeat reached Mr. Sears at 5 P.M. Tuesday, when a Mississippian called to tell him that the delegation had decided to vote as a unit against Rule 16-C, that is, to adopt the Ford position.

Just a few hours earlier, Mr. Sears had believed he was on the verge of a Southern victory in 1033 in the Alameda Plaza Hotel, down the hall from the Reagan suite, he had sat with shoes off, talking on the telephone trying to hold 51 votes in the North Carolina delegation.

His main problem, he recalled later, was the colorful delegation chairman, Tom Ellis, "a man who requested changes to his mind." Mr. Sears said with a short, sharp laugh mixed with equal parts humor and derision, "I had trouble communicating with him in the past, and now I couldn't figure out what he wanted from us."

Shortly after 2 P.M., one of Mr. Sears' top aides, a 29-year-old North Carolinian named Charlie Black, reel-thin and with the sharp mind and soft accents of a Southern country boy, walked into the suite with some of Mr. Ellis's demands. Mr. Ellis wanted Mr. Sears to sign a letter guaranteeing that Philip M. Crane, the ultraconservative Congressman from Illinois, would be granted two minutes' speaking time at the convention that night to support the foreign policy plank pushed by the Reagan forces.

"Charlie," Mr. Sears said with a grin, "I made deals before, but I never had to sign anything." Nevertheless, the 51 North Carolina votes loomed large. The letter was signed and returned about 30 minutes later. Ed Meese, one of Mr. Reagan's top staff members telephoned to say that Representative Crane could not address the convention on the plank because he was not a delegate.

A Pleased Candidate
The campaign manager groaned. "Now Ellis will think we've double-crossed him." He computed the delegate count in his mind, an exercise that was by then second nature. He worried that attrition in the North Carolina delegation could destroy the delicate balance of the convention.

Governor Reagan and some of his traveling staff entered the suite at 3:20. They had just visited the Mississippi delegation, and the candidate was obviously pleased and relaxed. He said that he had brought the Mississippians to their feet twice with applause. Mike Deaver, the candidate's chief of staff, agreed that the meeting had gone very well. They were eager for news of the prospects for Rule 16-C and Mr. Sears briefed them. Things were going well, he told them, but Mississippi held the key.

After the candidate left, Mr. Sears and his staff discussed security at the communications trailer. On Monday night about one-fourth of the phones linking the trailer with key delegations in the hall had gone dead for 35 minutes. There was talk of possible sabotage.

leave for the convention hall, the phone rang. The message was that the entire Mississippi delegation would oppose Rule 16-C. Mr. Sears' heart sank.

"The first thing I did was refigure the count," he recalled. "We could still do it, we could still pull it off, but most of our commitments on 16-C were on the basis of our strength tied to Mississippi coming along with us. If Mississippi had stayed, we had a solid 1,100 of the 1,130 votes needed to win, and we could have picked up those 30 extra votes in dribs and drabs. We could have won it actually with about the vote the Ford forces ended up with—1,170 or 1,180, instead, without Mississippi, we did not get anyone else."

The Reagan command trailer was adjacent to the Ford command trailer and similar in most respects, but slightly larger. Mr. Sears' secret was that his trailer had six air-conditioners, against only three in the Ford trailer, an edge when sweltering delegates were pulled from the convention hall for a drink and some arm-twisting.

Mr. Sears took up a position in the front of the trailer for four console phones that could put him in touch with delegates and workers on the floor, the Sky Suite box where family and friends of the candidate and the Governor's staff room at the hotel. He faced open cubicles in which field men worked telephones to the floor.

During the balloting on 16-C, the trailer was alive with noise and excitement. The pace was frantic as one state after another answered the roll-call vote. Mississippi passed, but the damage had been done. Rule 16-C was defeated.

Roger Moore, a Boston lawyer who advised Mr. Sears on convention procedure and law, placed a friendly call to congratulate his counterpart in the Ford camp, and someone remarked, "Roger thinks he's at the Harvard-Yale game."

"No Longer a Chance"
Mr. Moore said that it would have been a miracle had 16-C passed. "It's just a matter now of getting drunk one night ahead of time," he said.

Some of the workers suggested that the vote would be better the next night, on the balloting for the nominations. No one was fooled, however. "There wasn't anyone in the trailer who didn't know it was all over right then—there was no longer a chance of getting those 40 or 50 votes we needed to put us over," said Mr. Sears.

Still, the game had to go on. "Out of fairness to the 1,000 delegates who had worked hard to get to Kansas City to vote for Ronald Reagan for over a year," said Mr. Sears, "we couldn't pull the rug out from under them."

He instructed everyone in the trailer to remain inside so they would not have to face questions from newsmen gathered nearby, "to beat us into submission and have us concede defeat." Mr. Sears told the trailer staff, "Let's wait until they adopt our foreign policy plank, and then we go out and say we won one and lost one."

Hours passed and debate on the platform dragged on. It was well past midnight, and Senator Paul Laxalt, chairman of the Reagan campaign, said he had to get back to his hotel and get some sleep. One working diverter the newsmen and the Senator slipped out a side door and hopped a back fence in the darkness. Inside the trailer Mr. Sears and his troops laughed insanely.

It was about 2 A.M. when the campaign manager and his secretary, Joan Follick, left. They stopped at an all-night sandwich joint and Mr. Sears, a junk food addict, ordered his first meal of the week, "a real good greasy" dinner. "Just sandwiches, chief," said the man behind the counter. The strategist sighed. He'd had nothing but sandwiches for three days. He ordered two cheeseburgers.

Three other diners in the place recognized him and walked over to ask questions. Miss Follick tried to chase them away, but Mr. Sears interrupted. "What are you trying to do, keep me from my fans?" he asked.

On the ride back to the Alameda Plaza, he was pensive, a sure sign, Miss Follick sensed, that he was deeply depressed. He got to bed after 3 A.M. and had to be up for an 8 o'clock meeting with Mr. Reagan.

The Governor took the bad-news better than most politicians would," Mr. Sears said of the meeting Wednesday morning. "He's not the kind of guy who gets immersed in all this. Some politicians can't be told the whole truth right away because they can't take it all at once and they fall apart. To keep them bucked up you have to get into a string of lies, give them something to hope for, which leads to trouble, because it sometimes forces the candidate to get into a whole string of lies with other people to keep the fiction alive."

Wednesday was spent deep in the frustration of waiting for the inevitable. Mr. Sears' celebrated bag of tricks was empty. There would not be more surprises; the order of the day was to keep the lid on and take consolation in having put up a good fight.

Still, the rumors flew all day. "The Ford side was nervous, expecting anything," he said with the air of a man who had enjoyed a clash of "Every time we did anything neutral it sent shock waves through the other side. For instance, when we said we would be happy to adopt the temporary rules of the last convention, which is a perfectly routine matter, they sent about 35 lawyers to the rules books to find out what we had up our sleeve."

At 11 A.M. he tried to take a nap. No one can tell when he is exhausted, Miss Follick explains, because he looks tired all the time.

William Timmons of the Ford staff called before noon to arrange a meeting between the President and Mr. Reagan after the nomination that night. Another sandwich and a glass of milk for lunch.

At 4 P.M., munching potato chips as he talked, Mr. Sears completed plans with the White House staff for the late night meeting before leaving for the convention hall for the last time, he told the staff in his hotel suite that the Reagan count that night would be 1,070. In 1968, when he worked the campaign of Richard Nixon, he missed the nomination count by one vote. Tonight he would be right on the money.

The ride to Kemper Arena, with the results of the convention casted longer than usual. As the sedan crossed a bridge above the old stockyard, swallowed by the creeping twilight, the convention hall in the distance looked almost ghostly, a specter lit by powerful exterior lights.

John Sears was pensive again.

Drive for Black Votes Starts in 13 States

By THOMAS A. JOHNSON

Seeking to increase significantly the influence of blacks at the polls, a coalition of more than 40 civil rights and other groups is mounting a major voter registration drive called "operation big vote." It will concentrate on 13 states with large populations of blacks, including New York and New Jersey.

The National Coalition on Black Voter Participation will formally begin its campaign in Washington on tomorrow, and after a drive to reach the nearly 7 million blacks that the Census Bureau says are not registered to vote, the coalition leadership plans to get out the largest black vote in history in the November election.

The other target states are California, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Maryland, Michigan, Missouri, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Tennessee and Texas.

The group's goals include improving the power of blacks to influence legislation in Congress and in the Administration, and providing a base for a permanent black political lobby, drawing on the organizations that make up the black voter coalition.

The group would also like to increase the number of black elected officials in the country.

A figure currently put at about 4,000 out of more than 521,000 elected officials nationwide.

Several of the participating groups have voter registration programs in progress throughout the year. These include the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the National Urban League, the People United to Save Humanity and the A. Philip Randolph Institute.

Several of the local groups and individual volunteers, such as the Modernistic Barber Shop in Mount Vernon, N. Y., have already begun preparing forms for registering blacks to vote.

Financial Support
And young black and Puerto Rican youths, employed by the Harlem-based Operation Helping Hand organization, a narcotics prevention and rehabilitation agency, have averaged about 100 registrations a day with tables set up on the sidewalks of some community intersections.

The coalition, whose headquarters are at 733 15th Street, N.W., in Washington, is expecting some financial support from foundations as well as some funds from participating labor unions. But most of the money for the campaign will come from the predominantly black groups themselves.

While organizations of black Democratic officials were among the principle planners of the coalition, these groups have since withdrawn from this nonpartisan effort to conduct their own registration and voting campaign under the auspices of the National Democratic Committee.

The Democratic committee is scheduled to spend about $2 million in voter registration before the election, and about 40 percent of that is to be spent in black districts.

The coalition will concentrate on the following cities in the target states:
Columbus, Los Angeles, Oakland, Richmond and San Francisco in California; Jackson, Memphis and Tampa in Florida; Chicago and East St. Louis in Illinois; Gary and Indianapolis in Indiana; Baltimore in Maryland; Grand Rapids, Lansing, Saginaw and Detroit in Michigan; Kansas City and St. Louis in Missouri; Newark and Jersey City in New Jersey; Buffalo and New York City in New York; Cincinnati, Columbus and Dayton in Ohio; Philadelphia and Pittsburgh in Pennsylvania; Dallas and Fort Worth and Houston in Texas.

Some of the participating groups include: the African Methodist Episcopal Church; the Federation of Business of the World; the Joint Center for Political Studies; Core (A.F.L.-C.I.O.); Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority; Fours Alpha Phi Fraternity (Inc.); The National Urban League; the United Negro College Fund; the Young Socialist Alliance; the National Office of Black Catholics; the Coalition of Black Trade Unions; and the Union of Black Trade Unites and the cause Michigan is the home state of the President, Mr. Powell said. "But we're not conceding Michigan," he added.

Warm Springs, he said, is "an extremely beautiful setting" that holds significance for the country because of its relationship to Mr. Roosevelt, who spent a great deal of time there as a part of his rehabilitation from polio. Later, President Mr. Roosevelt made the town his Southern White House.

Other Steps Planned
In addition to his opening in Georgia on Sept. 6, Mr. Carter will probably appear at a stock car race in Darlington, S. C., and at an evening rally in Virginia, Mr. Powell said, in the first week of his campaign, he will spend his time in other Southern states and in the urban Northeast.

Mr. Powell also disclosed that the Democrats plan to supplement the appearances of Mr. Carter and his running mate, Senator Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota, with a coordinated schedule for their wives and their families.

"We will be hitting almost every area of the country every week with somebody," he said. A map with scheduling overlays will be used, "to get a visual feel for all this," he said.

Moreover, he said, that arrangement will be augmented with appearances on behalf of Mr. Carter by "prominent Democrats" such as Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama, Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California and Senator Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts.

Mr. Powell said that the purpose of the trip to California this week would be early exposure in an area where campaign extra winter and six primaries.

Ex-Wife Says Dole Is a 'Perfectionist'

By B. DRUMMOND AYRES Jr.
Special to The New York Times

SYLVAN GROVE, Kan., Aug. 21—Senator Robert J. Dole, the Republican nominee for Vice President, is described by his former wife of 23 years, Mrs. Lon Buzick, as a man of Reagan-style political ideology and Carter-style work habits.

"He'd be a good President if it came to that," said Mrs. Buzick, who was divorced by the Senator four years ago and is now married to a local cattleman.

"But," Mrs. Buzick added, "I'm afraid he'd be a bored Vice President, because he's so ambitious and aggressive. He's a driven perfectionist, a 'workaholic.' You might even call him a total political creature."

"That was our main problem," she continued. "We split amicably enough, more out of a lack of communication than a shortage of things in common than anything else. There was no other man or woman, just the hard fact that 24-hour politics and our marriage didn't mix well."

The marriage produced a daughter, 21-year-old Robin. She lives in the Washington area.

Senator Dole is now married to the former Mary Elizabeth Hanford, a Federal Trade Commissioner.

Mrs. Buzick said that Senator Dole's political philosophy was "very close" to that of Ronald Reagan, the former California Governor whom President Ford also considered as a running mate.

"Bob Dole," she continued, "will tear into Jimmy Carter. He is just as smart and just as tough and just as hard. He can campaign forever if he has to, even with the arm."

Senator Dole's right arm was badly shattered in World War II while he was serving as an infantry officer in Italy. He met Mrs. Buzick, the former Phyllis Holden of Concord, N. H., in a recovery hospital in which she was working as a physical therapist.

Mrs. Buzick, who is 51 years old, expressed no bitterness toward Mr. Dole. She said that she and her present husband, whom she first met more than 20 years ago, periodically talk with the Senator at Republican gatherings in this little town or elsewhere in Kansas.

Rationale for Talking
She agreed to discuss the Senator and to tell her side of the story on the rationale that his candidacy for the second highest office in the country injected a public note into what normally would be considered a private matter.

"I probably know Bob about as well as anyone," she said, "and I know of nothing that should keep him from running."

Mrs. Buzick believes that the Senator's war wound, which left his arm partly immobile, had much to do with his total immersion in politics.

"He was a good athlete as a young man," she said, "and not being able to compete in physical things after the war really hurt him. He's so fiercely competitive that he just channeled that fierceness out of sports and into politics."

Mrs. Buzick said her divorce had turned out to be "the best thing that happened to me."

"Once free," she said, "I found out just how numbly unhappy I had been all those lonely years that he was off politics day and night, seven days a week. The last year, the three of us ate supper together only four times. When I asked him why, he said he didn't have time to talk about it. He finally got around to talking about it two months later, and what he talked about was divorce."

"I learned about marriage and American politics from all of this," Mrs. Buzick concluded. "I hope Bob learned something, too."

going to campaign on Carter's doorstep.

Within a few days a Ford representative will see Jimmy Carter, the Democratic nominee, to try to arrange for televised debates in the fall campaign.

In a dramatic gesture in his acceptance of nomination, the President told cheering convention delegates that he was "ready, eager" to debate Mr. Carter face to face "on the real issues." But the details of the format must still be worked out. Mr. Ford's aides said he had taken the "bold stroke" because he was the underdog in current political polls.

The President began his presidential campaign in America's heartland yesterday when he went to Russell, Kan., Senator Dole's hometown, to salute his "teammate" in a picnic gathering in front of the century-old courthouse.

Wife Is Fatigued
Mr. Ford's wife, Betty, appeared fatigued on the couple's arrival here yesterday.

Rear Adm. William L. Lusk, asked about the First Lady's condition following her husband's victory at the Convention, said, "She is really hurting."

"She has suffered some real discomfort. It's the neck. My nurses have had to apply hot packs," the President's doctor said. "What with the rest she's now getting, she will be all right. She just needs some rest and she is getting that."

Mr. Ford asked about his wife's condition, said, "She was really tired yesterday."

But she'll be able to get going again in a few days, Mrs. Ford said. She said she was tired from the long hours, but she was not really exhausted.

Conservationists Give Carter High Marks and Ford, Low Ones

By GLADWIN HILL
Special to The New York Times

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 21—If environmental concern won elections, there would be no need for a November runoff between Jimmy Carter and President Ford.

Conservationists give the Democratic candidate very high marks for his record and positions on environmental problems and give Mr. Ford very low ones. The same disparity exists between the running mates, Senator Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota and Senator Robert J. Dole of Kansas.

What this may mean in terms of votes is problematical. Although opinion surveys indicate environmental quality remains an important concern of citizens, it is regarded as essentially a "switcher" issue—not a primary determinant, but a subject capable of polarizing otherwise undecided voters.

Recognition of this was suggested in both the Democratic and Republican primary campaigning. Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona made environmental values a major talking point, apparently to considerable effect in the North Carolina primary, both President Ford and Ronald Reagan were impelled to espouse preservation of the New River from power development—a reversal of a previous Ford stand.

A Carter victory in November would portend a new outlook on environment in the White House where it has been getting very short shrift, conservation leaders say, and perhaps some significant changes in the activities of some Federal agencies.

A leading political-activist organization in the environmental field, the League of Conservation Voters, rates the former Georgia Governor as "outstanding." President Ford, by contrast, was called "hopeless."

The nonpartisan, Washington-based league is a campaign arm of such groups as the Sierra Club and Friends of the Earth, as well as thousands of individual citizens throughout the country.

The league's latest rating of Senator Mondale, on the basis of selected votes and environmental issues in the Senate, was 78 out of a possible 100 points. Senator Dole's score was 38.

Mr. Ford was in office 10 months before he met a group of environmental leaders, and then it was to advance the philosophy that there needed to be a détente between environmental quality and economic advancement.

Mr. Carter, by contrast, on the day he announced his candidacy, said in answer to a news conference question that in the case of a conflict between economic development and environmental quality "I would go with environmental quality."

The league analysis of Mr. Carter's record runs 42 typewritten pages. Some highlights are as follows:

As Governor of Georgia from 1970 to 1974, he consolidated most of the state's environmental functions into a Department of Natural Resources, with a vigorous administrator; got budget increases for environmental activities and launched numerous new projects.

Rivers: Blocked Federal construction of the controversial Sprawell Dam on the Flint River; opposed Soil Conservation Service stream channelization.

Energy: Advocated national policies pegged to lower energy consumption growth rates; urged attention to alternative sources such as solar power; recommended a low priority for nuclear development.

Oil: Favors restrictions on the oil industry's vertical integration and ownership of competing energy sources; has advocated Federal, rather than industry, exploration of offshore oil deposits.

The main faults found in Mr. Carter's record were his support of large-scale highway construction, placement of Georgia's coastal program under a budgetary agency rather than a resource agency, advocacy of deregulation of natural gas, and "waffling" on abortion.

Ford Is Credited

Mr. Ford was credited by the league with having "served environment well on a handful of occasions," such as his policies on international fishing and whaling restrictions, predator poisoning, and revitalization of the railroads.

However, the league added, "His administration has usually chased after energy at any price."

Cited were the Administration's promotion of nuclear power, accelerated offshore oil and west coal-leasing programs, and Mr. Ford's two vetoes of strip-mining control legislation.

Also on the debit list were the White House's opposition to Federal land use planning legislation, and pressure for weakened water pollution regulations, extended deadlines on air pollution compliance, and weak toxic substances controls; and undesirable policies on mining, logging, and grazing on Federal lands.

"The Ford Administration in general has turned its back on the environmental movement," Michael McCloskey, executive director of the Sierra Club, commented Thursday. "I have never seen a contrast between two positions drawn more clearly."

Departing from tradition, the Sierra Club, in the forthcoming issue of its monthly magazine will publish the respective Carter and Ford responses to a league questionnaire on environmental views.

While little has been heard from the Ford camp on the role environment will play in the President's coming campaign, Mr. Carter has been organizing a sizable environmental task force. It includes such individuals as Joe Browder, recent head of the Environmental Policy Center, a Washington lobbying group; and Katherine Fletcher, recently the Environmental Defense Fund's regional coordinator in Denver and a specialist in Western coal and oil-shale problems.

HIGH RATINGS GIVEN TO DOCTORS IN POLL

Teachers Also Esteemed Over Congressmen

Many more people esteem honesty and ethical standards of medical doctors, engineers and college teachers than of business executives, according to the latest Gallup Poll.

The survey results indicated that there was among the public both an antibusiness and an anti-Congress sentiment, both of which have suffered in recent years from disclosures of corruption and unethical activities.

Fifty-five percent of those interviewed in the poll thought the honesty and ethical standards of medical doctors was "high" or "very high." Engineers were next with the confidence of 48 percent, and college teachers followed with 44 percent.

Journalists received a "high" or "very high" rating 33 percent and lawyers by 25 percent of the 1,524 adults interviewed in the survey.

They were asked this question: "How would you rate the honesty and ethical standards of the people in these different fields—very high, high, average, low or very low?" The poll was taken between June 11 and 14.

At the bottom of the ratings came advertising executives, whom only 11 percent thought had high or very high standards. Labor union leaders received a high rating from 13 percent. Representatives from ethical standards of senators and business executives were named by 19 percent.

Following are the 11 categories in the poll and the percentages of those who rated the groups as high or very high:

Physicians	55
Engineers	48
College teachers	44
Journalists	33
Lawyers	25
Scientists	23
Politicians	19
Business executives	19
Advertising executives	11
Senators	11
Union leaders	13

Clark Bids Congress Pass Program of 'Sweeping' F.B.I.

By THOMAS P. RONAN
Ramsey Clark, former United States Attorney General, called on Congress yesterday to provide "sweeping" reforms in the Federal Bureau of Investigation to make the organization "lawful and effective."
He added the names of Elbridge Cleaver and Fred Hampton, the Black Panther leaders; Juan Marie Bras, a Puerto Rican Socialist; and Jerry Rubin, the Yippie leader.
Mr. Clark said he also had refused permission to tap the National Mobilization Committee, the Student Mobilization Committee, the Fifth Avenue Vietnam Peace Parade Committee, Liberation magazine, the African American Heritage Association and the Black Panther Party.
Mr. Clark's F.B.I. reform program included "disclosure of past misconduct," "ongoing full public disclosure" except for criminal investigations and disclosures invading privacy where the individual opposed it, a fixed four-year term for the director, prescribed investigatory functions and a citizens' review board.

Three of Mr. Clark's opponents, Daniel P. Moynihan, City Council President Paul O'Dwyer and Representative Bella S. Abzug, also campaigned yesterday. The fifth candidate, Abraham Hirschfeld, observed the sabbath quietly.
Mr. Moynihan, at a news conference, advocated approval of a welfare-reform bill before Congress that he described as "an updated and expanded version of the Family Assistance Plan" that he helped devise several years ago. That plan was approved by the House, but died in the Senate.
According to Mr. Moynihan, the new bill, which is sponsored by Representative Robert J. Cornell, Democrat of Wisconsin, and by Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican from New York, and others in the Senate, would federalize the administration and costs of welfare and save states and localities about $4.5 billion a year.

"Above all, it would provide working poor and dependent poor families what they need most—money—without the current degrading welfare red tape and rules that have been so destructive to the family life of our less fortunate citizens," he said.
"It would help them find the dignity they need to make a better life for themselves and for their children."
Mrs. Abzug on L.I.
Mr. Moynihan again criticized Mrs. Abzug for voting against his Family Assistance Plan in the House. But she said the plan was complicated and badly drawn and would have created a "bureaucratic nightmare."
Mrs. Abzug campaigned on Long Island, where she attended the Polish Street Fair in Riverhead, shook hands with bathers on the East Hampton fund-rising activities about $4.5 billion a year.

Mr. O'Dwyer, a former New York City Council President, said he was disappointed that Mrs. Abzug had not supported the plan in the House.

Some Storage Concerns in New York City Fleece Customers of Their Be made of numerous other charges that are often mandatory with storage. These charges include:

• A three-month minimum on storage.

• A fee, usually equal to one month's storage, to move goods both in and out of the warehouse.

• An access charge, usually $15 to $25, imposed each time the consumer seeks access to his goods, to add or remove items or simply inspect them.

• A platform fee equal to one to two month's storage if goods are picked up at the warehouse by the customer or another mover.

• Fees for camphorizing and sanitizing, fumigating, and special wrapping, and late charges of 1.5 percent a month on the unpaid storage-fee balance.

It's Unregulated Piracy

As a result of these "hidden charges," according to the officials, a consumer expecting a storage bill of $200 to $300 may instead get a bill for $600 to $1,000, and sometimes more.

"It's unregulated piracy," said Stephen Mindell, chief of the frauds division in the State Attorney General's office.

"Once the warehousemen have your goods, you are in the land of Captain Kidd, and they have you hook, line and sinker," he added.

"In New York, warehousemen operate with impunity from the law to the point where, before you can get meaningful aid when there is a dispute, your goods are sold at auction," Mr. Mindell said.

"Our office is bombarded with complaints each year, but there is little we or anybody can do because storage is a completely unregulated industry.

"They give the consumer a bill with a number of charges they never disclosed before, and if the consumer dares to question or challenge them they threaten to and sometimes sell his goods at auction."

Consent Decrees Entered

Mr. Mindell said the best his office had been able to do in the absence of regulations was to get companies against which customers have filed complaints to enter "consent decrees." A consent decree is a pledge by a business to discontinue certain disreputable practices in the past.

One of the companies that signed the decree was Metropolitan Fireproof Warehouse, which has several addresses, including 1356 Rockaway Parkway and 95 Lexington Avenue, both in Brooklyn.

The agreement with the warehouse grew out of a complaint by Willis Hall, a United States Treasury Department warehouse agent assigned to the New York area, who alleged that the company had sold $15,000 worth of his furniture at auction for $150, although he had paid his bill.

No Receipt Given

During an interview Mr. Hall asserted that he called the warehouse after seeing an advertisement in the telephone directory and, after being quoted a modest storage rate, had set up arrangements for storage.

"The men came to my house in a leased truck, picked up the furniture, but the only receipt they left with my wife was an inventory sheet with no signatures and no company name or identification whatsoever," he said.

"I immediately tried calling the warehouse to find out about my furniture, but nobody seemed to know anything about it," Mr. Hall added.

"Then, about two months later I got a call from the warehouse telling me that if I still wanted my furniture I had better come over right away and pay my bill because they planned to auction it off that afternoon."

Goods Are Auctioned

Mr. Hall said he had gone to comply with the demands and had found his bill much higher than he had anticipated because of additional charges for such things as sanitizing and camphorizing and for a three-month-minimum storage period.

"I subsequently made regular payments on my account, but at another point received a notice that said my goods had been sold at auction," he said.

"When I inquired about the notice, I was told to disregard it and that it was simply a scare tactic used to cajole customers into paying," Mr. Hall said.

"I asked to see my furniture and I was told it was against company rules. So I kept paying my bill and when the bill was paid I asked for my goods and was told they had been auctioned."

"I was told my furniture was auctioned for $150 and that because it was a cash transaction there was no receipt."

"I complained to city and state agencies and they told me my only alternative was to sue," Mr. Hall continued, "but I found that the business had no assets in its name and that a suit would be useless."

Owner Can't Be Reached
Repeated efforts to reach Frank Sepe, owner of Metropolitan Fireproof Warehouse, were unsuccessful. Telephone calls to the two Brooklyn listings for the business went unanswered, and Mr. Sepe has an unlisted number on Staten Island.

The warehouse is one of four that, until recently, operated out of 1356 Rockaway Parkway. The others include Alliance Fireproof Warehouse, Unique Moving and Storage and Kenmore Moving and Storage.

According to Donald Curran of the Office of the Impartial Chairman of the Moving and Storage Industry, a union affiliate that monitors that industry, there have been numerous complaints against the four companies and other warehouses in Manhattan and Brooklyn in the last five years.

"The way the four warehouses using the same address operated was that one company would pick up the goods and a second would bill the customer, and the customer would not know exactly who had his goods," Mr. Curran said.

Use of Name Protested

One of the companies, Kenmore Moving and Storage, has applied to the State Department of Transportation for authority to transfer its moving certificate to a company called Starrett City Moving and Storage. Officials at the Starrett City Housing development, a 6,000-family development nearing completion in the Spring Creek section of Brooklyn, have opposed use of the Starrett name, arguing that it would mislead consumers into thinking that the moving company was affiliated with the development.

Kenmore, bearing the Starrett City name, plans to use Klamasha Lake, N.Y., mailing address, although the moving certificate is valid only in a small area of the New York City metropolitan region.

Representatives of Kenmore Moving and Storage, which has the same telephone listing as Metropolitan Fireproof Warehouse, could not be reached by telephone.

Many Complaints Filed

According to Mr. Curran, there have been numerous complaints against the four companies and against Lentine Brothers Moving and Storage, the Charles Strang Warehouse, and AAA Kings County Van Lines, each in Brooklyn, and North American Moving Company (not North American Van Lines) in Manhattan.

The State Department of Transportation and State Attorney General's Office also have complaints against the companies.

The Charles Strang Warehouse, AAA Kings County Van Lines and Alliance Fireproof Warehouse each entered consent decrees with the State Attorney General's office, in which they promised henceforth to disclose fully all charges to customers.

Mr. Hall, said he had been advised by an attorney that he could not sue Metropolitan Fireproof Warehouse for compensation for his lost goods because it had no assets. Reports filed annually with the state by moving concerns do not include the company, but they do include others operating out of the same facilities and using the same telephone.

Companies Report Losses

Financial reports filed with the State Department of Transportation show that Kenmore

Moving and Storage, which is also owned by the wife of Frank Sepe, earning revenues of $17,624 and showing expenses of $22,651, for a net loss of $5,027.

Alliance Fireproof Warehouse, which uses the same address and telephone number as Kenmore and Metropolitan Fireproof Warehouse, showed total revenues of $91,783 and expenses of $92,851, for a net loss of $1,068.

WEST POINT CITES RASCALERS

1 of 84 Cadets Found of Collaborating Engineering Test

FRANAY GUPTA
United States Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., today announced that it had expelled one of 84 cadets who were implicated in a scandal that has rocked the institution.

The academy's action, which took place on Friday, followed a review of the cases of 84 cadets, brought to the attention of the academy by a cadet who had been convicted of cheating on homework that was given for a test given to last year's class in electrical engineering.

The academy's action was a departure from the Academy's usual practice of expelling cadets through resignation, and thus far only one cadet has resigned, rather than being expelled, in the cases of the 84 cadets at West Point.

The Code Criticized
The question of whether the cadets should indeed be expelled has touched off a controversy with some critics of the honor code. Several Congressmen have argued that the honor code is outdated and that expulsion is too harsh a punishment for cheating.

representing the cadets last week. The House of Representatives has asked the Army to delay or prevent the expulsion of cadets until the West Point court of cadets might be held in the honor code.

54 percent of the cadets who were expelled last week were expelled for cheating on homework that was given for a test given to last year's class in electrical engineering.

more than 180 members of the House of Representatives have asked the Army to delay or prevent the expulsion of cadets until the West Point court of cadets might be held in the honor code.

is Awaited
The case will go to Mr. Hoffmann's court on Monday. He would suggest that the court investigate the charges. A panel has been set up to investigate the charges and their law.

Secretary Hoffmann on whether to expel the cadets already found guilty of cheating on the honor code. The Court of Military Honor is to hear the cases of the cadets and the court's decision, too, is week.

the subcommittee on Monday. Secretary Hoffmann is expected to be in the Army. Gen. Sid D. Mott, the Superintendent of the Academy, said that it planned the hearings to be held in the rooms and auditoriums of the Academy. The officers boards at the Academy are also cleared one week, bringing the total to 34. The cadets were discharged the five.

Aug. 20 (UPI) — George Lohr and Claudine Lohr are charged with slaying Vladimir Sobich, because of his appeal of his ruling in the singer's diary. The Colorado Court would hear the appeal at the earliest date. The trial certainly are not held until the end of the year.

However, that he is to be held in the trial date to the Supreme Court. The district attorney's appeal was scheduled to be heard in the court.

Let's attorney, told Judge Hoffmann, expected the trial because of the finding impartial.

It pleaded not guilty to a charge of murder in the slaying of Mr. Sobich, at the trial. The attorneys said the slaying was accidental.

HOUSING INSURER SUED IN BIAS CASE

National Unit Joins Owners of New York Apartments in Action Against Company

By MURRAY ILLSON
The National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing has joined the owners of 10 New York City apartment buildings in a $3 million damage suit charging an insurance company with racial discrimination.

The suit, filed in Federal District Court in Brooklyn, charges that the Public Service Mutual Insurance Company is seeking to cancel fire-damage and property-damage policies on the 10 apartment buildings, which are occupied largely by blacks and Puerto Ricans.

According to the brief that the committee will file in the Federal court tomorrow, such action constitutes racial discrimination. The building owners filed their brief Friday.

Jay Mulkeen, a lawyer for the committee, which is a 26-year-old Washington-based civil-rights organization financed by the Ford Foundation, said the suit marked the first time that civil-rights advocates had challenged an insurance company in a Federal court on grounds of racial discrimination.

The suit, he pointed out in Washington, seeks to extend the 1968 Fair Housing Act to insurance companies.

The committee and the building owners contend that Public Service Mutual, which has its headquarters at 392 Seventh Avenue, has redlined certain black and Puerto Rican neighborhoods in the city and is canceling its policies covering buildings in those areas.

Redlining is an alleged practice among some banks and insurance companies of designating neighborhoods with high concentrations of minority groups and denying people in those areas access to mortgage money or insurance coverage.

Company Denies Charge
The company has denied the charge. A spokesman for the company could not be reached yesterday.

According to the owners of the 10 apartment buildings, which are in Manhattan, Brooklyn and Queens, cancellation of the insurance would force evacuation of some 1,000 tenants.

The owners and the committee contend that the 1968 Fair Housing Act prohibits redlining by insurance companies as well as mortgage-lending institutions and that the suit to extend the act to the insurance companies is "an unprecedented legal effort."

On Friday the building owners asked Judge Jacob Mishler in the Federal District Court to stop Public Service from canceling its policies and to award $3 million in monetary damages to the owners of the 10 buildings, which were said to contain 259 apartments. The owners, it was said, want $2.5 million in compensatory damages and $50,000 for each of the 10 buildings in punitive damages.

The insurance company, according to the owners, charged a total of $26,729 to insure all of the buildings for three years and the policies, which were paid for in advance, were to expire on Sept. 9, 1977.

However, the company, which reportedly wanted to terminate the policies as of noon tomorrow, agreed to a request by Judge Mishler to keep the coverage in effect at least until 5 P.M. Wednesday, to give him time to study applicable laws.

The building owners said that the only other company willing to pick up the coverage now provided by Public Service wanted a total of $60,000 for only one year. Such a charge would force the owners to close or abandon the buildings, they said.

The affected buildings are at 223 and 248 East Third Street; 283 and 336 East Fourth Street; 46 Rivington Street and 546 East 13th Street, all on Manhattan's Lower East Side; 60 and 63 South Oxford Street in downtown Brooklyn, and 105-05 Astoria Boulevard, East Elmhurst, Queens.

Burton and a British Model Are Wed by Arlington Judge

ARLINGTON, Va., Aug. 21 (AP)—Richard Burton and Susan Hunt, a British model, were married here this afternoon.

The civil ceremony was performed by Judge Francis E. Thomas Jr., with Bob Wilson, who was best man at the actor's first marriage to Elizabeth Taylor filling that post again.

The bride, formerly married to James Hunt, a race-car driver, wore an off-the-shoulder floral-printed pink silk dress.

The other official witness for the couple was John Miller. Also present were Aaron R. Prosch, a lawyer for both Mr. Burton and Miss Taylor, and John Springer, press agent for Mr. Burton and Miss Taylor.

After the wedding, the couple flew to New York City for reception at Laurent, a restaurant in the Lombardy Hotel, where the Burtons will live while he makes a new movie.

Mr. Burton was married to Sphil Christopher.

Reservists Help Beautify Central Park

WARNING IS ISSUED ON TICK INFECTIO

Cases of 2 Serious Types Found on Long Island

By WOLFGANG SAXON

The New York City Health Department alerted the public yesterday to be on guard against two unusual and possibly fatal infections transmitted by ticks. It said several cases of the infections had recently occurred on Long Island.

The warning came in addition to one issued in May when the department advised that growing tick infestations in the region had led to a danger of outbreaks of Rocky Mountain spotted fever here. The department said yesterday that 16 cases of the fever had been reported on Long Island so far this year.

The two parasitic infections cited in the latest warning are babesiosis and tularemia, or deerly fever, so named because it can also be acquired from the bite of an infected deerly.

Dr. John S. Marr, director of the Bureau of Preventable Diseases, said the symptoms of babesiosis were high fever, chills and hemolytic anemia, including the destruction of red blood cells by the transmitted parasite. He said the disease was similar to malaria but was transmitted by ticks rather than mosquitoes.

Two Cases Are Cited

According to Dr. Marr, the disease was contracted by a 48-year-old man in Montauk and by a 54-year-old woman on Shelter Island. He added that the infection was either on the increase with tick infestation or, he said, "Prior to 1975, there were only six other cases ever reported throughout the world."

Dr. Marr said treatment was the same as for malaria. He urged anyone developing a high fever or evidence of hemolytic anemia after a visit to the beach areas of Long Island or the islands off Long Island and Massachusetts to undergo a careful examination by a physician.

Two Tularemia Cases

There also were two cases of tularemia, including that of an 8-year-old Queens girl who spent a weekend at a camp in Suffolk County, Dr. Marr reported. He said streptomycin was used for treatment.

"Approximately one to ten days after the bite of the tick, a raised black scab will appear at the bite site, accompanied by fever, chills, headache and enlargement of lymph nodes near the bite site," Dr. Marr said. "There is a 10 percent mortality rate without treatment if the lymph nodes are involved and a 30 percent mortality rate if pneumonia develops and is not properly treated."

Health officials said that since insecticides were not very effective against ticks, the best precaution would be to stay out of infested areas. They advised those exposed to search for ticks on children, pets, themselves and articles of clothing worn outdoors and to see a physician if any of the symptoms appear.

About 55 Naval Reserve officers made Central Park their base of operations yesterday as they turned up with shovels and rakes to solidify the crumbling soil around arches in the area.

This is a bit of a departure from what would normally be doing," said Lieut. Ken Morgan, "but it was a choice between doing community work or doing paperwork back at our training center in Fort Schuyler in the Bronx."

The choice arose because the reservists generally spend weekends aboard the Power, their training ship. This weekend, however, the ship was in Mayport, Fla., so the reservists, all of them from the metropolitan area, had to stay ashore.

But the prospects of engaging in routine paperwork through out a bright weekend were not said Don Remuzzi, a task force particularly appealing to the reservists pack soil around Merle, the commanding officer of the Naval Reserve crew. The men worked through most of the day, using lumber to prevent the soil from spilling onto the pathways below the arches. Commander Merle, who is a corporation lawyer, said that the soil erosion was due to the party to rain that had loosened the land and partly to visitors who slide down the banks from the foot of the arches.

The reservists are scheduled to return to the park today to work on the Playmate Arch, which is near the 65th Street Transverse.

"There's a definite sense of fulfillment in doing this," Commander Merle said, adding that his unit would probably help in pay for personnel who'd be doing such work, otherwise, frequently in the future.

Quake Frequency Increasing in 1976

Around the World
WASHINGTON, Aug. 21 (AP)—Earthquakes have killed tens of thousands and wreaked devastation on three continents this year, making 1976 the deadliest year for quakes since 1970.

The Geological Survey said this week that the number of severe quakes doubled since June, indicating that 1976 may reverse the lull reported since 1973. Ten major earthquakes and three great quakes already have occurred this year. The average is 16 to 18 major quakes and one great quake a year.

A major quake registers 7 or more on the Richter scale. A great quake 8 or more. Every increase of one point means that the ground motion is 10 times greater.

The National Earthquake Information Service in Golden, Colo., reported 11 major shocks in 1973. There were 12 in 1974 and 13 in 1975. The first great quake since 1971 also occurred last year.

Total Loss Is 27,000

Earthquakes have taken more than 27,000 lives, and possibly many thousands more so far this year. This makes 1976 the deadliest year for quakes since 1970, when more than 67,000 were killed in Peru and Turkey.

This year's toll includes 23,000 deaths in Guatemala in February, 900 in northeastern Italy in May, 600 in Bali in July and at least 3,100 in the Philippines this week.

The Geological Survey said the death toll was expected to go higher because of expected fatalities from major quakes in China on July 28 and afterwards. China has not released casualty figures.

Also not included in the figures are deaths from major quakes that hit the Soviet Union on April 8 and May 1, and unconfirmed reports of 9,000 killed in western New Guinea on June 25.

Nassau Policeman Is Wounded While Questioning 2 Suspects

By DAVID VIDAL

A Nassau County police officer was shot in the stomach and critically wounded yesterday morning, apparently with his own gun, as he attempted to question two men outside a warehouse in New Hyde Park, L.I.

The officer, Stephen Cull, a veteran of seven years on the police force, is assigned to the Third Precinct in Williston Park. He was reported in critical condition after his spleen was removed during two hours of surgery at Nassau Hospital in Mineola. The bullet exited through his back.

According to the Nassau deputy chief of police operations, Charles Spahr, who is in charge of the investigation, Officer Cull was on a routine check of an area at Nassau Terminal Road, near the Long Island Rail Road tracks, when he made a radio request for information on wanted suspects around 10 A.M. Told to stand by, the officer did not follow up except to send a signal a few moments later that he was in trouble.

Two Men Sought

"Cull was found lying semiconscious alongside his patrol car by Police Officer Anthony Ureyvick, who had heard the radio call," a department spokesman said.

No suspects were reported in custody, but Officer Kevin Matthews, who is in charge of public information, said the police were looking for "two men."

He said that he could give no details beyond that and that the semiconscious Officer Cull, who is married and has six children, had not been questioned. The search for persons described as being in the area of the shooting also was expanded to other parts of the county.

The police search along the railroad tracks caused trains to slow down. A spokesman for the Long Island Rail Road said there were delays in both directions at about the time of the shooting but none directly attributable to it.

"A train went of the tracks at Mineola at about 10:25 and this led to delays building up for as much as two hours," the spokesman, Richard Makse, said. The derailment produced signal trouble, he added.

The spokesman said the area of the police search was in the vicinity of the Merrillon Avenue station in Garden City Park, which is between Mineola and New Hyde Park.

4 Jersey Counties To Get Storm Aid

President Ford yesterday declared four counties in New Jersey as disaster areas as a result of storms and flooding caused this month by Hurricane Belle. The storms and flooding caused extensive public and private property damage.

President Ford's action, announced in Vail, Colo., will permit the use of Federal funds in relief and recovery efforts Monmouth Ocean, Atlantic and Cape May Counties, as requested last week by Governor Byrne. Included in the assistance is debris removal, repair and restoration of damaged public facilities and roads. Low-interest disaster loans will be made available by the Small Business Administration.

Five Horses Dead; Spraying Weighed

Five horses have died upstate apparently from Eastern equine encephalitis, and spraying may be required to prevent the disease from spreading to humans, according to the State Health Department.

Dr. Donald Lyman, director of the department's communicable disease bureau, said the areas involved were being inspected by health officials to determine if the mosquito that transmits the viral infection to humans was present in sufficient numbers to require spraying. Dr. Lyman said officials were assuming that equine encephalitis was the cause of the deaths of three horses in Oswego County and two in Onondaga County, although laboratory tests would take up to three weeks.

Body of Woman Is Found in Lake

The nude body of an unidentified young woman was found floating near the beach house in Prospect Park Lake in Brooklyn early yesterday morning. Capt. Harold Coleman, in charge of the 10th Homicide Squad, listed the death as a homicide, but the cause was not immediately determined. He said the woman, in her late 20s, about 125 pounds, brown-eyed and brown-haired, had bruises on her neck and back.

11 Are Arrested at 'Las Vegas Night'

Ten men and a woman were arrested early yesterday by the police public morals division in a raid on a "Las Vegas Night" gambling operation at the Palm Shore Beach Club, 3128 Emons Avenue, Brooklyn. The officers confiscated $6,700 in the raid, which saw 300 people playing cards, dice and a lottery. Those arrested were said to be operating illegally by taking cuts out of the bets made.

7-Day Wait Called Average For Medical Appointment

CHICAGO (AP) — Waiting time in a doctor's office may seem interminable, but it doesn't come close to the time necessary to get an appointment in the first place, the American Medical Association says.

The average waiting room time is only 20 minutes, the association said after a nationwide survey. But it took an average of 7.3 days to get an appointment for a non-emergency health problem, the A.M.A. added. The wait for an appointment with a general practitioner was an average four days.

Obstetricians - gynecologists reported the longest average waiting time for an appointment: 17 days. The survey found general practitioners kept their patients waiting longest: 27 minutes. Psychiatrists kept their patients waiting the shortest time: five and a half minutes.

Airmen Survey Shows Some Would Not Fight

SAN ANTONIO, Aug. 20 (AP)—An Air Force survey of recruits show that some of them would rather run than face an enemy.

Asked if, given a choice, they would evacuate a base under attack or stay and fight, 49 percent said they would battle it out. But 23 percent said flatly they would not and 28 percent were not sure.

And, said 37 percent of the recruits surveyed at Lackland Air Force Base here, they would not have enlisted if the United States were at war. Lackland is the Air Force's depot for all its recruits.

The findings were included in a survey of "Basic Airmen's Values and Perceptions of Society — 1976," which was taken among 1,000 enlisted men and women. The bulk of the survey, The Air Force said, supports its contention that today's recruits are the best ever.

Editor Beaten and Robbed Outside Queens Subway Stop by 2 Men

By EMANUEL PERLMUTTER

An editor on the Latin-American desk of United Press International in New York City was reported in critical condition yesterday from head and eye wounds suffered when he was assaulted and robbed Friday night on a Queens street.

The victim was Norberto Swartzman, 40 years old, who had returned recently from a vacation in Argentina, where he had been a newspaper reporter and radio broadcaster before migrating to the United States seven years ago. He was being treated in the intensive-care unit at Mary Immaculate Hospital in Queens, where it was said his condition was expected to improve.

Mr. Swartzman's colleagues at U.P.I. said that his home had been broken into twice by burglars in the last four months.

American citizen, had been with U.P.I. for the last six years, preparing news dispatches for distribution in Spanish to its Latin-American clients. He lives with his wife and their two children at 222-27 100th Street, Queens Village.

Two Men in Attack

According to the account Mr. Swartzman gave to the police of the 103d Precinct, he was set upon by two men at 178th Place and Hillside Avenue, Jamaica, Queens, after he had stepped from a subway station and had started walking to his car parked nearby.

He said it was his custom to park his car near a station and take the subway to his job at United Press on East 42d Street in Manhattan.

Mr. Swartzman said he was first struck on the rear of the head with heavy metal that he believed was a pipe. As he fell to the ground, he saw his two assailants, who continued to strike him as he lay there.

Mr. Swartzman said the attackers then seized his coat jacket and fled with its contents, which include $60 in a billfold. The jacket was found by the police a few blocks away.

The assaulted man's wife, Dora, and their young son and daughter, returned by plane yesterday morning from Argentina.

HARTFORD GIRL CUTS ARMS BEFORE CROWD

HARTFORD, Aug. 21 (UPI)—A girl slashed her wrists and forearms and then rushed to the steps of Immaculate Conception Roman Catholic Church holding a razor to her throat last night as a jeering crowd of 300 applauded and threw bottles at her.

The girl, whom the police would only describe as a juvenile, was hit by one bottle during the 45 minutes she held policemen, priests and friends at bay by threatening to cut her throat. After fainting at the scene, she was reported in stable condition today at Hartford Hospital.

Police Officer James Quigley said he saw the girl slashing her forearms and wrists about 10:30 P.M. He approached her and she ran a block to the steps of the church as policemen, priests and friends tried to talk her into dropping the razor she held to her throat. She ignored them and cut is cyclical. There will be a time when the whole thing will turn around, and we will each kick ourselves for not having bought property."

Study Finds Banks Reducing Investment in New York Real Estate Because of Drop in Property

"New York City real estate is increasingly politicized," wrote another respondent. "Rent control and regulations in many cases are confiscatory. We have no confidence that our political leadership will resist this trend."

Rent control was cited in all but two of the returned questionnaires, both as a cause of the shortage of mortgage money and as a condition that could be changed to encourage the flow of investment funds into residential properties.

Many real-estate operators had thought that the city's fiscal difficulties would lead the City Council or the State Legislature to modify the city's rent regulations.

Foreclosures Cited

Bankers also cited the rising rate of foreclosures as another discouragement to investment in New York properties. Fifteen of the institutions responding said the foreclosure rate on mortgages they held on properties in the city was higher than for properties outside New York. Thirteen of these institutions said that was not true five years ago.

In 1974, 10 foreclosure suits

City office buildings. Last year 42 suits were filed, and real-estate specialists expect the number to be even higher this year.

Every bank responding to the questionnaires said it had stretched repayment schedules or recast mortgage terms to prevent even more foreclosures. Every bank also said this practice had become more common than it was two years ago.

"Money flows where it gets the greatest return," said one banker, explaining why many banks had reduced the percentage of their assets invested in real estate in New York City and elsewhere.

He was referring to the increased attractiveness of other kinds of investments, which are frequently cheaper to administer and more secure than real-estate mortgages. Several banks said they were investing a larger proportion of their funds in government securities, including Municipal Assistance Corporation bonds.

Under the heading "Changes that would encourage your institution to grant more mortgages here," one banker wrote: "Truth serum administrations to politicians before they speak."

Besides the abolition of rent control, the most frequently listed suggestions in this category included Federal or state insurance of loans, a removal of the 5.5 percent usury ceiling that limits the interest individuals can be charged for single-family home mortgages and less hostile attitude by the and tenants toward property owners.

New Federal and state disclosure requirements, which take effect at the end of this month, will require banks to make public extensive information about their mortgage-lending practices.

Regulations Hailed

However, several real-estate investors said in interviews last week that they had detected a new willingness on the part of many banks to make loans in New York City. They attributed the change to the new disclosure requirements.

"I think the requirements are helping us because some of the banks are making more mortgages," said Harvey Katz, a mortgage broker with H. A. Adams Associates. But Mr. Katz added that the banks were limiting their new expansion to prime East Side or Greenwich Village deals.

"I can't blame them for choosing East 67th Street if they have their choice between there and West 96th Street," he said, "but it leaves people in other areas in bad shape."

Twenty-four of the institutions said they would not grant mortgages for new construction of office buildings, and 22 said the same about new apartment houses. But a majority of the banks said they were still interested in making loans for the conversion of office buildings and hotels into apartments, and the renovation of older apartment buildings.

Last January the city expanded tax abatements available for such renovations under its J-51 program. Depending on the cost of the conversion, renovated buildings can be exempt from real-estate taxes for as long as 10 years.

Despite the bankers' professed interest in conversion, many real-estate owners say it is still extremely difficult to obtain mortgage money for conversions from the city's banks.

million, in J-51 conversions, according to a wait-and-advance for conversion said. The bank reported new conversions for financial, Katz.

"We've seen deals on rent banks for 1 of office buildings," Mr. Katz said. "The Lincoln Savings Bank, small bank, has invested about $100,000."

New Haven Rail Line Ordered To Start 7-Step Safety Program

WETHERSFIELD, Conn., Aug. 21 (AP)—Connecticut has ordered Conrail to begin a seven-step safety program on New Haven line commuter trains, in the wake of the New Canaan crash last month that claimed two lives and injured more than 30. The program, which is to be implemented immediately, includes a plan to make it easier for passengers to open rail-car doors in an emergency.

Transportation Commissioner James Shugrue said in a statement: "One of the major complaints voiced at public sessions in New Canaan was that passengers experienced extreme difficulty in following the procedure to open the doors manually," Mr. Shugrue said. "It does no good to have emergency procedures when very few people are able to follow them."

He said one corrective measure would make manual operation of the side doors on "Cosmopolitan" cars easier during emergencies. Mr. Shugrue issued his directive after meeting with Gov. Ella T. Grasso. The steps ordered by Mr. Shugrue included the following: "Revisions to emergency release mechanisms to permit easy and convenient operation of the side doors."

Establishment of methods for emergency personnel to open the side doors from the outside when traction power or emergency battery power was lost.

Regular training programs for rescue units in towns along the railroad so they will know how to gain easy access to rail cars.

Adjustment of car-end doors for easy opening by passengers who have to move forward because of short lengths of rail platforms.

Protective padding on seats and other areas to provide cushioning in case of an emergency stop.

Clear identification for places where emergency ladders are stored and an indication of their availability to passengers and rescue units.

Adjustment of luggage racks so they will hold cargo more securely and reduce the possibility of personal injuries from flying luggage.

Mr. Shugrue said that although he did not know what the program would cost, "I feel it is of great importance that we move as quickly as we can to carry it out."

He also said his plan was not meant to be all-inclusive. He said he would authorize any "additional measures that will further enhance the safety of rail passengers."

Battle for Water, Vital to Dry Parts of Sunbelt, Intensifies in West

billions-dollar business, full of shrewd attorneys, decade-long lawsuits and enough intrigue to suggest that the movie "Chinatown," about a water-diversion plot, was not all fiction.

Now, metropolitan areas like the front range of the Colorado Rockies (Denver, Fort Collins, Colorado Springs), Phoenix and Tucson have experienced explosive growth, putting intensified pressure on what some experts feel is a dwindling amount of unused water from those Colorado River sources.

At the same time, water-gulping new industries such as coal gasification and oil shale in both Colorado and Arizona threaten to demand the same water.

"We're at the point where we are running out," said Representative James J. Johnson, a Colorado Republican who helped lead the "wilderness" bill fight. "The predictions made 10 or 15 years ago are really coming true," agreed Clifford I. Barrett, assistant commissioner for resources and planning in the Bureau of Reclamation.

"Or are they? One problem with water, according to Representative Patricia Schroeder of Denver, is that 'protected water needs, supplies and population levels are all just guesses.'"

Whether the predictions are correct or not, some results of the Western water squeeze are already apparent.

Colorado farmers who rely on irrigation have had their water rights condemned by a reading Denver suburbs, under a law that gives municipalities higher priority. Arizona farmers have had to farm less and pump water more, at high cost, because underground water tables are dropping.

Speculators Active
Speculators have been snapping up water rights for resale to budding towns. The water budgets in the blossoming cities of Colorado, Arizona, Utah and New Mexico have skyrocketed over the last 20 years.

For example, Denver's water department now serves 851,000 people in the metropolitan area, an increase of 55 percent since 1956. During that time, consumption of water grew from 38.4 billion gallons a year to 67.7 billion, a 76 percent increase. Its revenues jumped from $6.8 million to $32.6 million, a 379 percent increase.

Colorado's front range is not considered part of the Sunbelt, but in terms of growth it might just as well be. Similar statistics were recorded in the same period by the water departments of Phoenix (population grew up 389 percent, water consumption up 270 percent, revenues up 678 percent); Albuquerque (population up 56 percent, consumption up 400 percent); and Tucson (population up 248 percent, consumption up 333 percent, revenues up 1,220 percent). In comparison, Los Angeles's water district rose only 25 percent in population in the same period, 6 percent in consumption and 6 percent in revenues. Despite environmental and her opposition, mind-boggling engineering projects, designed to pump water hundreds of miles through mountain ranges and across deserts to supply these urban areas, have moved steadily ahead.

"Several hundred projects are in the works and all want the same water," said Robert Weaver, a water expert for the Colorado Open Space Council. "It's a giant water grab to see who gets the projects built first."

Mr. Weaver and others see the Eagles Nest "wilderness" bill, the Central Arizona Project fight and the Colorado vs. Bureau of Reclamation fight as all parts of the same puzzle.

Denver's Needs

The Eagles Nest story began as a simple proposal by the United States Forest Service to designate a large mountain area near Vail for wilderness use. But Representative Johnson, whose district includes part of the western slope of Colorado, purposefully added to it a region that the Denver Water Board wanted as a new source of water to be channeled eastward to the dry, rapidly urbanizing plains on the front range. Denver is east of the Continental Divide but already pulls more than half its water from the western slope.

It was a major chapter in a long history of fights between eastern and western Colorado interests. The western slope won its most significant victory when, in July, Congress passed and President Ford signed a version of the bill denying Denver the water.

There had been two years of intensive lobbying. The Denver Water Board, whose five members are appointed by the Mayor (three are in construction or water-related business) warn that if it lost, consumer water costs would rise dramatically and the metropolitan area might eventually run short. "It will double water rates eventually over and above inflationary increases," Kenneth J. Miller, a Water Board official, said recently, explaining that costly pumping facilities would be needed.

Opponents, an unusual coalition of environmentalists, western slope energy companies, farmers and lawyers, argued that Denver exaggerated. They said the western half of the state needed the water. Denver could cut down on its waste of the precious resource.

Mr. Miller insisted that the Water Board was being attacked for simply planning future needs realistically. "Ten years is tomorrow" in the water business, he argued.

However, a Denver weekly newspaper, The Straight Creek Journal, implied recently that the Denver Water Board president, Charles F. Brannan, might be working both sides of the Continental Divide for profit.

Mr. Brannan also heads two western slope power companies that could wind up battling with the Denver board for water—or selling water rights to it.

Mr. Brannan, in a telephone interview, called the conflict of interest charge "utterly ridiculous." He said the water rights of his western slope companies would never conflict with Denver's needs.

In any case, just as western slope people feared a water "steal" by Denver, so Colorado's top water officials fear an upcoming power play by Arizona.

When the Central Arizona Project was authorized by Congress in 1968, several water storage projects in Colorado were also planned. Arizona was not to take any water for the central project until the Colorado projects were completed.

Colorado Complains
At a heated meeting July 30 in Montrose, Colo., however, Felix L. Sparks, Colorado's Water Conservation Board director, accused Federal Bureau of Reclamation officials of deliberately dragging their feet on these and other Colorado dams.

The dam-builders said the delays were routine and unavoidable. But Mr. Sparks said "deeper suspicions" that Arizona and neighboring California were exerting their political clout in Washington to make sure the Central Arizona Project got finished first. This project would take water from the lower Colorado River near Lake Havasu and transport it through 300 miles of aqueducts and canals to the Phoenix and Tucson areas. Once Arizona began taking huge quantities from the river, Mr. Sparks said, there might not be enough of a flow to fill the planned Colorado reservoirs farther north.

Mr. Sparks demanded the resignation of some reclamation officials and threatened to sue the Government. The Bureau of Reclamation quickly assured Colorado that schedules would be speeded up and its projects would get under way by next March.

Meanwhile, opponents of the Central Arizona Project, parts of which are already under construction, argued vigorously at a July hearing against the Orme Dam, one of its principal elements.

This $2 billion project, they said, is a boondoggle that will really benefit rich agribusiness farmers who need more water for irrigating desert land. The dam would also flood the Fort McDowell Indian Reservation and disturb wildlife habitats. There's enough subsurface water to satisfy a population of 10 million people forever in the Phoenix region, the critics said.

Falling Water Table
Clifford Pugh, the Central Arizona Project manager for the Bureau of Reclamation, said in a recent interview that the water was desperately needed. Yes, it would go to agriculture at first, he said. But eventually Phoenix, Tucson and their suburbs would take it all. Moreover, he said, one-third of central Arizona's farmland had gone out of production because pumping water from underground aquifers had become too expensive. The water table has been dropping in the Phoenix-Tucson area by some 10 feet each year.

The first Central Arizona Project water should be delivered to the region from the Colorado River on time, around 1985, he said. Mr. Pugh scoffed at the idea that Arizona might "steal" Colorado's rightful supply.

Behind all of these individual water squabbles are two larger, related issues. One is, can water be a factor in limiting or promoting growth? The other is, as more people arrive can Western Sunbelt residents make do with less water, yet still preserve their lush way of life?

Some, like Representative Johnson, think water is an important determinant in the growth of an area. "The Denver Water Board was very farsighted," he said, noting that the utility had legally locked up vast water supplies years ago and had profitably sold much of that water to the suburbs. "That's the reason Denver and the surrounding communities are the size they are. The Water Board provided the opportunity to grow."

Mr. Sherman thought water could be used to some extent to limit growth. The state's official policy, he pointed out, was to look for ways to curb agricultural water sales to cities and to hold off some trans-mountain diversions.

But Mr. Miller of the Water Board and Glenn Saunders, Denver's most prominent water lawyer, both argue that people and industry would continue flocking to Colorado and Arizona regardless of the water situation. "When you need water, you get it. If we have to fight a war, we'll get enough water," Mr. Saunders said.

Not quite so, according to Mr. Weaver, of the Colorado Open Space Council, and others. They say that if cities like Denver and Phoenix grow without conserving water, they will have to flood more recreational stream beds, dam scenic rivers, pave over fields with concrete and tract houses, pollute the air with coal-fired electric generating plants and thus degrade the quality of life newcomers came to enjoy in the first place.

The alternative would be for Westerners to ration their water. Denverites now use 208 gallons per capita per day, Phoenix residents, 208. Most of it goes to water laws, which would dry up almost overnight in these arid climes without constant sprinkling.

Rationing is an anathema to most water professionals. "I'd move somewhere else if I couldn't water my lawn. So would everyone else," said Mr. Pugh in Phoenix. "There's such a thing as quality of life and laws are part of that."

Mr. Fischer, a western slope engineer, holds a middle position. Both Colorado and Arizona, with a little care, could have diversion projects and most of the good life, he said. "The lady in Phoenix will be able to wash her diapers but she won't be able to excessively water that Kentucky bluegrass."

Since nobody can agree on anything else in water politics, it is interesting to discover that all sides subscribe to one much-quoted adage, which also defines the expected future course of water in the West.

The adage is: "Water ordinarily flows downhill, except when it flows uphill toward money."

PRICE INCREASES OFFSET PAY GAINS

Labor Department Reports on 500 Businesses in New York City Area.

By MURRAY ILLSON
Pay gains of 7 percent or more for white-collar and blue-collar workers in New York City in 1974-75 were offset by consumer price increases, according to a survey conducted by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the United States Department of Labor.

A detailed report of the findings on occupational pay levels from a May 1975 survey of 500 business establishments was issued yesterday by Herbert Bienstock, regional commissioner of labor statistics. In it, he disclosed that adjustments for changes in consumer prices brought real earnings down for both clerical and blue-collar workers.

Real wage levels of skilled plant workers, he said, dropped at an annual rate of 1.1 percent since the last survey, for April 1974. For unskilled plant and office clerical workers, real earnings edged down 0.7 and 0.4 percent, respectively.

Between April 1974 and May 1975, average weekly salaries of office clerical workers rose at an annual rate of 7.3 percent, the report said. Mr. Bienstock pointed out that the 1974-75 increase was nearly one-third above the 6 percent rise registered a year earlier and the sharpest salary increase since a record 8.6 percent gain between 1969 and 1970.

Increase for Maintenance Workers
Skilled maintenance workers' 1974-75 gains in earnings averaged 7 percent; for unskilled plant workers, the comparable increase was 7.4 percent. Between 1973 and 1974, pay gains for both occupational groups averaged 7.7 percent, according to the report.

Mr. Bienstock indicated that an 8.2 percent annual rate of increase in New York-North-eastern New Jersey area consumer prices during the same period more than offset these gains in earnings.

For office clerical workers, the report said, real pay declined for the third consecutive year, edging down 4 percent following drops of 3.4 percent in 1973-74 and 0.6 percent in 1972-73.

For skilled and unskilled plant workers, earnings adjusted for consumer price changes were down for the second consecutive year falling 1.1 percent and 0.7 percent, respectively, in 1974-75 after a 1.8 percent drop for both groups in the previous year.

Pay levels of white- and blue-collar workers employed by New York City's private sector are typically higher than in the surrounding suburbs or Long Island, according to Mr. Bienstock.

Suburbs Lower than City
May 1975 pay levels for white-collar workers in the New York area outside the city (Westchester, Rockland and Putnam Counties in New York and Bergen County in New Jersey) averaged 7 percent below those in New York City. In Nassau and Suffolk Counties, white-collar weekly salary averages were 9 percent lower, it was said.

For maintenance, custodial and similar blue-collar occupations, Mr. Bienstock indicated that the suburban-New York City pay differences were wider. Average straight-time hourly pay of blue-collar workers in the rest of the New York area averaged 12 percent less than in the city.

In Westchester County alone, pay averages were 21 percent lower. Blue-collar pay levels in the Nassau-Suffolk area were, on average, 14 percent below those in the city.

Among the individual white-collar occupations surveyed, average weekly salaries of office clerical workers in New York City ranged from $118.50 for file clerks to $245.50 for the top-level secretary. The highest paid professional occupation covered by the survey was that of top systems analysts who averaged $385 a week.

Among the blue-collar occupations surveyed, straight-time average hourly earnings of skilled maintenance workers at journeyman level in New York City ranged from $5.34 for pipe-fitters to $7.01 for machinists. Pay levels in the city for automotive mechanics averaged $6.75 an hour. Comparable averages in Westchester County and the Nassau-Suffolk area were 3 percent to 12 percent lower, respectively, the report said.

Westchester Architecture Being Recorded in Photos

By JOHN T. McQUISTON

Westchester County's architectural heritage from the late 17th century to the present is being recorded this summer, building by building, by the Westchester Landmarks Project to commemorate the Bicentennial.

Frank E. Sanchis, the director of the group, which was initiated by the Westchester Bicentennial Committee, said a major objective was to create an awareness of the need for a "bureaucratic means by which the country's architectural heritage can be preserved."

He said that architectural historians were interested in every type of structure that existed a hundred or more years ago, not just in those considered to be beautiful or important by the people at that time. Similarly, Mr. Sanchis said, historians in 2076 looking back a century will be interested in everything that was built in 1976.

Since Westchester County has primarily been a place where people live, rather than work, Mr. Sanchis, a Peekskill resident, said it had the "greatest breadth of styles in homes, providing a real lesson in the development of American architecture."

Among the more unusual examples is Ward Castle, on Comely Road in Port Chester. Built in 1871 by William E. Ward, a tool manufacturer, the turreted mansion was the first reinforced-concrete home to be built in the United States, Mr. Sanchis said.

The county also has railroad stations built over a period of more than 100 years by five major carriers. Most of the stations, Mr. Sanchis said, are now owned by Conrail and are unused.

Next summer, the landmarks project plans to publish a book containing the results of the study, complete with more than 100 photographs of the most interesting historic sites. Mr. Sanchis said that Mercy College, in Dobbs Ferry, had provided office space and that his staff of young researchers had been employed through summer work programs. He said he was seeking additional money from the state Council on the Arts to complete the project.

Meetings This Week By City Council Panels

The following public hearings will be held by New York City Council Committees this week:

Tuesday — The Committee on Finance will hear from industry and administration spokesmen regarding a bill that would permit the Taxi and Limousine Commission to license official inspection stations to inspections on licensed taxicabs. 10 A.M.

Wednesday — The Committee on Environment Protection will hear testimony from the administration, environmental groups and the public regarding a bill that would establish a citywide noise control code conforming to residential and industrial zoning regulations. 10:15 A.M.

Thursday — The Committee on General Welfare will take up a bill that would establish citywide regulations for the conduct of games of chance (so-called Las Vegas Nights) for non-profit organizations. 10 A.M.

Friday — The Committee on General Welfare will consider action on the bill to conduct games of chance. 10 A.M. The full Council will hold a regular meeting at noon.

2 Updated Publications Offering List of Agencies That Aid Public

Agencies that assist people with financial, health and housing problems are listed in up-to-date versions of two community service publications being distributed by Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Greater New York. Both pamphlets are free.

A directory of the agencies and the services they render is contained in a pamphlet called "How to Secure Help," which is produced and distributed in conjunction with the Community Council of Greater New York. It has an English edition and one for Spanish-speaking readers.

The second pamphlet is called "Welcome to the School," and is distributed to newly hospitalized children and their parents. Available in both English and Spanish, it describes the schooling program that New York City offers to about 10,000 children every year. It was prepared in cooperation with the Board of Education.

The brochures are available in hospitals, schools and the police departments in the Greater New York area. All publications of Blue Cross and Blue Shield can be obtained by writing to the agency's communication department at 622 Third Avenue.

STATE TUITION AID FINALLY GOING OUT

Delay Laid to New Computer and Legislative Changes

ALBANY, Aug. 21 (AP)—State officials say they have cleared up the computer snarl that had delayed for weeks the delivery of scholarships and financial aid to thousands of anxious college students.

Tuition Assistance Program awards for this fall term are and caused concern among students and their parents facing the summer deadlines for payment. Miss Dickinson said that more than 50,000 awards under the program had been mailed along with lists of students whose Regents scholarships had been approved. The state developed a new system for processing the aid faster and more efficient student aid delivery in New York State.

Lefrak City Reports Progress In Resolving Project's Problems

By JOSEPH B. TREASTER

The owners and tenants of Lefrak City are continuing to make progress in stabilizing conditions in the huge housing complex in Queens that has been troubled by rapid racial change and physical deterioration, according to the city's Human Rights Commission.

In a report released yesterday on a six-month-long investigation into the problems that arose last fall in the 5,000-family, 20-building complex in the Elmhurst section, the commission said that "difficulties still persist." But it said that investigators had not only seen improvements but had also been encouraged that an initial commitment by the management and tenants to work for change had "persisted and grown."

Eleanor Holmes Norton, the chairman of the commission, said that a six-month effort could not be "expected to completely reverse all the development's problems," and she maintained that "the real test" would be in "how the effort is sustained over the long term."

Improvements Listed

Among the improvements that the commission listed in its report were the following:

- Greater security, which is said to have cut reported crime by about 30 percent for the first half of 1976.
- More youth recreational services, which are cited as having reduced vandalism and tension.
- More frequent cleaning and repair of public areas.
- Greater participation in the tenants association, with organizations forming on individual floors, with regular monthly meetings and the publication of a newsletter.

More stringent screening of prospective tenants by management, with the result that rejected applications have increased to 40 percent from about 25 percent.

One indication of the impact of the changes, the report said, was that an increasing number of tenants have been renewing leases.

The report issued yesterday appeared to bear out the earlier contention of the commission after a one-month study that the deteriorating conditions at Lefrak City could, indeed, be "turned around."

Other Reforms Proposed

Commissioner Norton said her unit had embarked on the investigation not only out of concern for the situation in Lefrak City "but because the issues in this development constituted classic stabilization concerns and thus had broad implications for the city as a whole."

She said that the commission saw in Lefrak City "an opportunity for early intervention to develop stabilization strategies in the context of a dense, high-rise urban environment that is so typical of this city."

Among several additional reforms recommended by the commission were the following:

- Development of a formal orientation program for new tenants.
- Additional modifications in the deployment and supervision of security forces.
- Expansion of youth recreation programs.
- Even further strengthening of tenant involvement and efforts by management.

Community Service Program Of A.F.L.-C.I.O. in 30th Year

By DAMON STETSON

A 27-year-old worker at a utility company walked into the office of the Central Labor Council's Community Services Committee here and told June Crawford, a counselor, that he was in deep trouble.

After some frank discussion, he admitted that he had been "mainlining" heroin and was afraid he was going to lose his job.

A fellow employee who had taken a training course in union counseling on the job had noticed that the young worker was "going off" and had suggested that he seek help from Community Services.

"He really wanted help," Mrs. Crawford said. "I found him to be a pleasant young man but much disturbed because he knew he was being watched by the company and that he was in trouble up to his eyebrows. He was cooperative, though, and agreed to go into a hospital for detoxification and then to accept follow-up counseling. Now he's back on the job."

The Community Services program of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations, which is completing 30 years of service, is one of the labor federation's noncontroversial but least heralded activities.

Services Described

Leo Perils, national director, said that the program means different things to different union members—crime assistance, blood banking, consumer and debt counseling, preparation for retirement, unemployment relief, union counseling, rehabilitation, programs to counter alcoholism and drug abuse, legal aid, fund-raising for voluntary health and welfare agencies, and programs for the aged and the young.

In Santa Clara, Calif., the wife of a worker with terminal cancer called Edward H. Camunez, the A.F.L.-C.I.O. Community Services representative there, and said that the family needed a hospital bed. The committee has what it calls a "loan closet" for medical and hospital equipment. The bed was provided.

In San Diego, Robert L. Moeller, director of the Community Services Committee, has developed "Project Link-up" to help the unemployed cope with debts, mortgage foreclosures, personal and family stress, loss of self-esteem and other problems that may accompany unemployment.

In Akron and other rubber centers, where workers were on strike for nearly four months, Community Services representatives have helped workers, if eligible, in obtaining food stamps or welfare assistance, in handling mortgage-payment problems and in family crises stemming from the strike.

The Community Services program is sponsored by the A.F.L.-C.I.O. through a nationwide network of full-time representatives from the labor movement, who work in cooperation with central labor councils and local community agencies. They now serve in cities and communities across the country. Others are on the national staffs of the United Way, the Red Cross, the Boy Scouts, the National Council on Alcoholism and the National Council on Crime and Delinquency.

In the last five years the labor federation's Department of Community Services has also developed, in selected communities, separate labor agencies. These agencies, still limited in number, are organized to provide a basic information and referral service for union members and the general community, and to steer people to the services needed as rapidly as possible.

Money Lacking to Fix Badly Potholed Streets

By EDWARD C. BURKS

A bumpy roller-coaster ride seems to be the prospect for the indefinite future for drivers on New York City's badly worn, rutted, pock-marked, hole-gauged, washboard-like streets.

The reason: Even with $45 million to $50 million in annual appropriations in recent years, the City Highways Department has been unable to resurface and rebuild streets fast enough to keep up with deterioration from heavy use and neglect.

Now Highways Commissioner Anthony R. Ameruso says that budget cutbacks have left only $23.4 million immediately available for such work in the new fiscal year, just a month old, plus $6.1 million from a special Federal "community development" fund.

Mr. Ameruso has several other resurfacing projects costing a total of $22 million "ready to go" if the city can get the money from the newly enacted $3.5 billion Federal public-works program.

No Work in Winter

Meanwhile, however, "the paving season is ticking away, and by about mid-December we'll have to stop until March," Mr. Ameruso said. Even if the city gets the $22 million from the Federal public-works program, only a relatively small percentage of the needed street resurfacing work can be done. The city has 6,000 miles of streets on official maps.

In addition to the washboard resurfacing of such main arteries as Eighth Avenue and the "shell holes" on Broadway in Brooklyn, the doctored local driver has to dodge thousands of potholes and so-called "utility cuts."

The latter, amounting to more than 20,000, are holes cut unceasingly into city streets to get at utility malfunctions in lines below the surface. Work around some utility cuts goes on for months and then may be repeated a year later. A good example is the stretch of Eighth Avenue between 42d and 43d Streets.

Fantasy-Like Scenes

When the work involves an underground steam line, the street scene can have the look of an H. G. Wells fantasy in which strange beings called "Morlocks" lived under ground and came to the surface only through long pipes. A "juny steam pipe" often projects from the "cut" in the street, puffing out steam as if someone, maybe Morlocks, had set up light housekeeping under the street.

Yet the scene is not exactly appreciated by drivers. Such frequent scenes delay payers and street repairers, too. And the Automobile Club of New York complains that the utility cuts often are not properly filled in, so that they make still another bump in the street, once covered over.

A club spokesman says further that the city has often covered over rough streets with a new surface of asphalt, leaving them "bumpy" and bumpy when the entire street should have been ripped out down to the roadbed and repaved.

As for rough main arteries, the Automobile Club points to long stretches of Fifth, Seventh and Eighth Avenues, 23d Street, Fulton Street in Brooklyn, and the Grand Concourse in the Bronx, just to mention a few examples.

And major roads "chronically susceptible to potholes" include the Henry Hudson Parkway, Franklin D. Roosevelt Drive, the Belt Parkway in Brooklyn and the Major Deegan Expressway in the Bronx, according to the club. Less than two years ago Mayor Beane reported the delivery of $3.7 million in highway equipment, including 103 trucks to deliver asphalt to work sites at a swifter rate than formerly, new asphalt spreaders and power rollers.

Earlier this year, in an attempt to save money—and because the surfacing program had been cut back anyhow—the Highways Department allowed the auctioning off of 30 of the new trucks, nine power rollers, an asphalt spreader and other equipment, Mr. Ameruso said. He estimated that equipment, which originally cost $380,000, had been sold for $302,000 and said that was not a bad price.

It was better to dispose of the equipment, purchased originally for an expanding program of surfacing, than to have it lying around unused," Mr. Ameruso said. Besides, he added, the Beame administration has ordered sharp cutbacks, and this saving helps avoid further layoffs.

According to Mr. Ameruso, the city still has 40 rollers and four asphalt spreaders for the current surfacing program.

Projects Under Way

Major highway and street projects, carried out under either city or state contracts, now under way are as follows:

The Bedford Park underpass in the Bronx, nearing completion; Myrtle Avenue resurfacing in Brooklyn; Remsen Avenue paving in Brooklyn between East New York Avenue and Kings Highway, including pedestrian ramps; Saxon Avenue in Staten Island.

In addition there are three state safety projects involving some resurfacing and installation of high median barriers: the Major Deegan Expressway in the Bronx, Brooklyn Queens Expressway and the Henry Hudson Parkway reconstruction work between 72d and 81st Streets.

The $9 million project to upgrade the Major Deegan Expressway (with 90 percent of the costs paid by the Federal Government) is scheduled for completion in or before November. The stretch of Deegan Expressway involved extends approximately five miles from the Cross Bronx Expressway interchange to the Westchester County line.

The work includes treating the road surface to lessen skidding possibilities, easing of a hazardous situation on a curve, better drainage and installation of the high, reinforced concrete median divider. The Automobile Club has had a campaign to "tame" the Deegan because the old-style low metal divider was often struck by motorists who sometimes crashed through into the opposite lanes.

Even the city's multitudinous potholes appear destined to be filled with red ink instead of hot patches. The budget for the new fiscal year anticipates filling 800,000 potholes. Yet last year highway crews filled one million, and two years ago 1,346,000.

Commissioner Ameruso is hopeful that a "more permanent type repair," involving hot instead of cold patching and the use of better sealers, will prevent the old potholes from popping open so rapidly. Time and traffic will tell.

Good Morning!

Because so many of our customers have expressed a desire to add to their collection of Brown Jordan leisure furniture, we are pleased to announce a very special POST SEASON SALE!

Although this year we stocked more Brown Jordan furniture than ever before, our large assortment was depleted very early in the season. As a result, many of our customers were unable to purchase the style and color wanted.

Brown Jordan has advised that all prices will be increased 5% - 7% on September 15th. However, by special arrangement we are privileged to offer during this sale the entire Brown Jordan line - any design, any color - at present list prices, less 15%, on orders placed before September 11. Sale prices include free delivery anywhere in the Continental USA. Deliveries will be made during February or March, 1977.

Remember - September 15th is the last day we can offer. Mail your order or call collect 203-869-4610.

Final payment may be until after delivery.

Sincerely,
R. M. Roberts, President

Rockefeller Subdued and Forlorn as Convention Drew to Close

By FRANK LYNN
Special to The New York Times

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 21—Vice President Rockefeller was as forlorn a figure as a multimillionaire Vice President can be amidst the New York delegation in the closing hours of the Republican National Convention. The usually ebullient and animated Mr. Rockefeller was a somber island in a sea of high spirits as President Ford and his running mate, Senator Robert Dole of Kansas, made their acceptance speeches.

That scene may be an omen of things to come, Rockefeller aides said it was not certain whether and how much the Vice President—in effect repudiated by his own party—would campaign this fall.

One obvious problem is the long-remembered conservative wing of the G.O.P., which still looks upon the 68-year-old Vice President as some sort of political pariah.

To avoid riling the conservatives who were already antagonistic to President Ford, Mr. Rockefeller generally kept out of sight during the Republican primaries before this convention. He confined most of his political activities in behalf of the President to quiet fund-raising in selected parts of the country where the name Rockefeller does not start riots.

Another problem, conceded by Rockefeller aides, is the question of how effective a lame-duck Vice President—particularly one with a reputation as a big spender and a big-government disciple—can be in a campaign in which the emphasis is going to be on attacking big government and big budgets.

Several New York Republicans noted that Mr. Rockefeller might not be an effective campaigner even in his home state, since many of the state's current fiscal problems can be traced back to the policies of his administration as Governor.

It will probably be a long fall and winter for Mr. Rockefeller, who will be leaving office in January.

It doesn't happen often, but at this convention, a party leader, Richard M. Rosenbaum, the Republican state chairman and head of the New York delegation, proved to be the dominant New York figure at the convention, overshadowing such heavyweights as the Vice President and the state's two Republican Senators, Jacob K. Javits and James L. Buckley. Mr. Rosenbaum—virtually disappeared once all the air had escaped from his Presidential trial balloon.

A national convention floor is probably the only scene where the political giants in a state are treated just like everyone else—seated on hard chairs in cramped space, sweating, having soft drinks spilled on them and trying to make themselves heard even to their neighbors amidst the constant din on the convention floor. In short, like all the rest of the 2,260 delegates.

Even if Representative Herman Badillo is defeated by Councilman Ramon Velazquez of New York City in the bitter Democratic Congressional primary in the South Bronx, he will be on the ballot in November as a Republican and Liberal candidate.

Why did the Republicans endorse an archliberal? State Senator John D. Calandra, the Bronx Republican leader, explained in his inimitable way: "He can win the the South Bronx on the Republican line and that will help the Republican party. He won't hurt our Presidential candidate running on the same line with him, and thirdly, we can't beat him—maybe that should be the first reason."

Humor isn't exactly epidemic in the Democratic Senate campaign, but two of the candidates, Representative Bella S. Abzug and Ramsey Clark, are using stock lines that are usually good for a laugh—and at the same time make a point.

"I may not be what a Senator looks like," said Mr. Abzug from beneath one of those big hats, "but I think I am what a Senator should look like."

Mr. Clark often pokes fun at his competitors' lengthy litanies of their past achievements. "I'm not going to tell all the glorious things I've done for you and to you," says Mr. Clark in his usual, dry manner.

Speaking of political humor, a Republican candidate in the Bronx is trying to put some life into what most politicians consider a kamikaze challenge of Representative Jonathan Bingham in the overwhelmingly Democratic 22d Congressional District.

"Don't Vote Slots" is the slogan of Paul Slotkin, the G.O.P. candidate.

The state administration may be Democratic, but Mr.

Rosenbaum, the Republican state chairman, is still dispensing state patronage, because Republicans still control several state boards, including the State Insurance Fund.

Mr. Rosenbaum recently gave a $35,000 plum as counsel to the Insurance Fund to Peter Pryor, an Albany Republican. He will also have another $35,000 post as deputy director of the fund to fill.

George L. Clark Jr., the Brooklyn Republican chairman, resigned the post because of the Carey administration ban on party officials, even Republicans, holding high state offices. Mr. Clark denied that his leadership of the Ronald Reagan hopes in the state and his rebellion against Vice President Rockefeller and Mr. Rosenbaum, who are supporting President Ford, had anything to do with his resignation.

The $43,050 director of the fund is Albert J. Millus, a Brooklyn Republican. Mr. Millus' wife, Rosemary, is a Republican district leader and a delegate to this party's national convention who has joined Mr. Clark in backing Mr. Reagan.

Ironically, the term of the chairman of the Insurance Fund, Harold V. Gleason, a Nassau County Republican, expired last December, but he has not been replaced, and thus remains in office.

Future Is Bright for the Folly Theater in Kansas City

Special to The New York Times
KANSAS CITY, Mo.—The Folly Theater, which has gone through about as many name changes as the characters in an Agatha Christie thriller since it opened in 1900, appears to have been saved.
 Among the threats were two "permanent" closings, a major fire and a long period during which the theater was open on an intermittent basis. Later it was designated for demolition under an urban-renewal plan. Two years ago it was announced that the property would be cleared for a downtown parking lot.
 That the red brick building, dominated by Palladian windows on the front facade, still stands is due in large part to Mrs. George C. Dillon, who has led a civic drive to purchase and renovate the structure.
 Mrs. Dillon is executive vice president of the Performing Arts Foundation, which now has title to the property. About $500,000 of the estimated $2 million needed to refurbish the playhouse has been subscribed.
 In its early months the theater, then called the Standard, offered burlesque, vaudeville and melodramas. The following year a fire claimed the famous Coates Opera House, which had drawn crowds from long distances from the prairie states. Opera and legitimate theater shifted to the Standard. Early in the history of the place that appealed to Joan Dillon and slowly she reached the conclusion that it was her "favorite building" in Kansas City. By chance a friend told her that names of Sarah Bernhardt, Maude Adams and Richard Mansfield.

 Closed in 1932
 Burlesque returned in 1906 when the property became known as the Century and featured such headliners as Al Foy. Later, prizefights and wrestling were scheduled on Saturday nights.
 After the fire, the Shubert brothers purchased the property, remodeled it extensively and it was reopened in 1923 as a legitimate house under the name of Shubert's Missouri Shakespeare and O'Neill were the vogue of the day.
 During the Depression the theater opened only sporadically for an occasional touring show or a movie. It closed in 1932, was sold for back taxes in 1938 and remained closed until World War II, when it was renamed the Folly and again became a burlesque theater.
 Gypsy Rose Lee, Tempest Storm and Peaches Browning entertained servicemen there.
 After the war the quality of the burlesque declined and even movies did not raise revenues enough to keep it open past December 1973.
 It was the history of the place that appealed to Joan Dillon and slowly she reached the conclusion that it was her "favorite building" in Kansas City. By chance a friend told her that he had just offered a bid to tear it down. Mrs. Dillon, also a member of the Municipal Art Commission, went to work.

 The Performing Arts Foundation agreed to take on the task of saving the theater.
$395,000 Appraisal
 With cooperation at City Hall, a redevelopment corporation was formed, giving it power of condemnation. "Once we got that, then the owner was very willing to deal with us," said Mrs. Dillon.
 The Folly, on the rolls of the National Register of Historic Places, was appraised at $935,000, but because of the local interest and the national designation, the owners, Anabar Associates of New York, agreed to sell it for $500,000.
 The Folly was purchased in December 1974 with $240,000 in local contributions, including $100,000 in community-development funds made available by City Hall and a $60,000 grant for historic preservation approved by the National Park Service. With a quarter of the funds needed for restoration already pledged, Mrs. Dillon is optimistic that the remainder can be raised. Initial plans call for a 1,000-seat house.
 Mrs. Dillon believes the location of the Folly Theater is a primary reason that restoration will succeed. It is near the geographic center of the downtown district and directly across the street from the $30 million H.

STORMIN' NORMAN, SUZY IN WRY BOOGIE

New York has not seen anything quite like Stormin' Norman and Suzy, who are appearing through next week-end at Trumps, 125 East 15th Street. Stormin' Norman, whose real name is Norman Zandack, plays a spare, jabbing style of boogie piano and writes wryly distinctive songs which seem to exist in the present, the 1920's and several other time frames at once.
 A drummer, bassist and saxophonist who engages in zany mugging as well as tapable playing, pound out the instrumental part of the group. Suzy Williams interprets Zandack's captivating songs with a controlled sort of frenzied staking and shimmying across Trump's tiny stage and bobbing out the more exuberant times without once overdoing her red-hot mama mannerisms. She is a natural performer and an original whose style seems in quite little to anyone, with the possible exception of her contemporary, Bessie Smith.

 The music is old-timey without being camp, and modern without sounding strident, and Miss Williams' energy and antics must be seen to be believed. Hopefully Stormin' Norman and Suzy will stay in New York long enough to conquer it.

AUTOMATIC "MOISTURE MAGNET" KEEPS ROOMS DRY FOR MONTHS!

2 for ONLY $5.99

- Stops mildew and musty odors in clothes closets
- Stops dampness, rot, rust, fungus in basements
- Reduces humidity in attics, eliminates the mess and smell of mildew

NOTHING TO PLUG IN... NO ELECTRIC COSTS.

Humidity in your home can cost you money... lots of money! Aside from making you extremely uncomfortable, excess humidity causes mildew, rot, rust, dampness, fungus and mold. It causes wall paneling to warp, walls to peel, dresser drawers to swell and stick, pipes to sweat.

New space-age miracle "writes" rooms dry!

If your solution to the humidity problem is an electric dehumidifier, that can cost you lots of money, too—in initial cost and in electric bills month after month. But now, at last, there's a much more economical way to enjoy the luxury of crisp, dry, refreshing rooms. The answer is the Moisture Magnet... a new "space-age" miracle product that actually "writes" humidity dry... makes go humidity like an automatic sponge! Best of all, the Moisture Magnet works for you 24 hours a day—for only a few pennies a day!

Incredibly easy to use!

To reduce the relative humidity in attics, basements, closets, living rooms—any room in your home—for months at a time... here's all you do:

1. Simply open the Moisture Magnet container and place it on the floor or on a shelf. From the moment you uncap the container, the amazing dehumidifier goes right to work drying out the air. The special chemical in the container instantly reacts to moisture and draws it out of the air out of the walls, out of your clothes. Yes, this remarkable Moisture Magnet soaks up excess humidity like an automatic sponge! What's more, it is absolutely harmless, odorless, non-toxic, non-flammable. Nothing to plug in... no electric costs to pay.
2. Lasts for months!
3. When water fills the container, simply pour it off—and your Moisture Magnet is ready to work again.

Why risk the discomfort and potential costly damage that excess humidity can cause? Order amazing Moisture Magnet Dehumidifiers for every room in your home... for your country place or vacation cottage, too. Only 2 for $5.99, 4 for $10.99, 6 for $15.99, 8 for $18.99. Order now.

90-DAY MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE
 Use the Moisture Magnet Dehumidifier for 90 days. You must be absolutely delighted with it—or return for prompt refund of purchase price.

No Divorce, But Brazilians Find a

By MERY GALANTERNICK
Special to The New York Times

RIO DE JANEIRO — Lea Tavora, a 38-year-old Brazilian psychologist, has been separated from her husband for years and is living with Schmil Ochs, who is separated from his wife.

Each has a daughter by previous marriage. They have a son born out of wedlock. For Mrs. Tavora and many thousands of Brazilians, Argentines and other Latin Americans whose countries refuse to recognize divorce and remarriage, the formation of new families has created few legal problems and little social stigma.

"When I first decided to move to Schmil's apartment eight years ago, I wanted to give the appearance of being married more than other women," said Mrs. Tavora. "But now even if there were such a thing as divorce, I would be in no hurry to get one. That piece of paper makes no difference to me."

"Desquites"—as legal separations are called in Brazil—and illegal second marriages have become an accepted part of life among the middle and upper class in this largest Roman Catholic country in the world. Desquites are still largely confined to the so-called "liberal professions"—that is, families with heads of household who are lawyers, architects, doctors, accountants and entrepreneurs.

But even the military, a bastion of social conservatism, has not proved immune to the rising wave of separations, particularly in the aftermath of the 1964 military takeover that has brought officers into increasing touch with civilian society.

The social columns of the leading newspapers regularly carry items on illegal second marriages and even on dinner parties commemorating these unions.

Last year, there were about 9,000 desquites in Rio de Janeiro alone, a 30 percent increase over the figure for 1974. Separation, which is most prevalent among couples in their 30's and 40's usually is by mutual consent on grounds of incompatibility.

A couple can become legally separated within a week after petitioning a court. The bureaucracy is such that it takes at least 30 days, however, to obtain a marriage license.

Although politicians have been struggling for 75 years to legalize divorce and have met steadfast resistance from the church and conservative sentiment, there are many legal protections for unlawful second marriages.

A separated woman who forms another family may be considered a concubine in the eyes of the law, but at the same time she has almost the same rights as a legal wife—including inheritance, accident insurance, the right to use her companion's name, and alimony should she separate again. Moreover, children born technically out of wedlock in illegal second marriages are considered legitimate. "There is no stigma on my kids because of my situation," Mrs. Tavora asserted, recalling a recent incident at her 11-year-old daughter's school.

Mrs. Tavora was asked to attend a parent-teacher meeting. A problem had arisen because a majority of the students had parents who had entered a second marriage, and the children were teasing classmates whose parents were legally married.

The situation today is far different from that of just two decades ago, when a separated woman and her children were regarded as second-class citizens. Faced with disdain, suspicion and hostility, a separated woman encountered problems finding a job or remaining within her circle of friends and acquaintances.

The fact that the job market has opened up so considerably in recent years, particularly for professionals, has provided an important cushion for women.

Vera Mata Machado, a lawyer, legally arranged her own separation within 24 hours early last year. Living in a spacious four-room apartment in a middle-class Rio suburb, she supports her three children, works in a family court and shares an office with a band. "I see everyw have a parents why a 24-h enough house, childre out wi She idea of experie tionshi band, better

Lea Tavora and Schmil Ochs relax in their apartment in Rio de Janeiro with their son, Eduardo. Legal separations and illegal second marriages have become an accepted part of life in Brazil.

Law Student Weds Megan Tallmer

Megan Tallmer, a lawyer, was married yesterday afternoon to Phillip Richard Kastellec, who will receive his degree next year from the Cornell Law School.

Civil Court Judge Walter M. Schackman performed the ceremony at the home of Dr. Margot Tallmer, the bride's mother and a practicing clinical psychologist and psychotherapist. The bride, who will keep her maiden name, is the daughter also of the late John Tallmer, an insurance analyst. She is a great-granddaughter of Rabbi Alexander Kohut of the Central Synagogue.

Mary Ellen and Jill Tallmer, sisters of the bride, and Kathleen Hall, the bridegroom's sister, and her husband, Richard Lee Hall, attended the couple.

The bridegroom, son of Mr. and Mrs. Phillip R. Kastellec of Solon, Ohio, is taking his final year at Columbia University's Law School in absentia from Cornell. He spent his freshman year at Vassar College and graduated cum laude from Miami University of Oxford, Ohio, where he was elected to Phi Beta Kappa. His father is chief engineer at Park Ohio Industries in Cleveland and his mother, Emily Jean Kastellec, is a realtor with Thomas Reap Realty of Ohio.

Cindy Siskind Married

Cindy Beth Siskind, a Boston University alumna and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sol Siskind, was married last evening to Steven Marc Warren, a graduate of College University and son of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Warren. Both families are of Stamford, Conn., where Rabbi Alex J. Goldman, assisted by Cantor Sidney Rabinowitz, performed the ceremony in Temple Beth El.

Mr. Fagelson was graduated from the Lawrenceville School and received a B.A. degree from the University of North Carolina. He served as a Navy lieutenant (j.g.) in the Mediterranean. Next month he will begin studies at the University of Virginia Law School. His father is the senior partner in the law firm of Fagelson, Schonberger, Blowitz & Grenader, practicing in Alexandria and Washington.

Muffy White Wed in Rhode Island to Robert Dwyer

Mariceo Eleanor White, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bradley White of Watch Hill, R. I., was married there yesterday afternoon to Robert Jeffrey Dwyer, son of John Edward Dwyer of Elizabeth, N. J., and the late Mrs. Dwyer.

The Rev. Seymour St. John, an Episcopal priest and former headmaster of the Choate School, performed the ceremony at the Watch Hill Chapel. He was assisted by the Rev. Harold J. Flynn, a Roman Catholic priest.

Mrs. Dwyer, who is known as Muffy, graduated from the Westover School and cum laude in May from Wheaton College in Norton, Mass. She made her debut in 1972 and was a member of the Junior Assembly. Her father is an independent real estate broker.

Mr. Dwyer, an alumnus of the Emory School, graduated magna cum laude in 1969 from Amherst College and cum laude in 1972 from the Harvard Law School. He is with the New York law firm of Cravath, Swaine & Moore. His father retired as superintendent of schools in Elizabeth.

A new era in theater seemed at hand in the early 1960's. Its playwright heralds were, clockwise from the left, Edward Albee, Jack Gelber, Jack Richardson and Arthur Kopit.

Where Have All The Playwrights Gone?

By ELENORE LESTER

Whatever happened to the renaissance in American playwrighting that was predicted in 1960 when three young men with close-cropped hair, white shirts, neckties, jackets and determined-to-succeed expressions on their sensitive faces posed together with diploma-like scrolls in their hands after winning the Drama Desk's Off Broadway Vernon Rice awards for their first plays?

The writers didn't look like rebels, but Jack Gelber's "The Connection," Jack Richardson's "The Prodigal" and Edward Albee's "The Zoo Story" had each, in an individual way, attacked post-World War II American society, employing unconventional techniques inspired by such vanguard European dramatists as Beckett, Ionesco, Genet and Giraudoux. The three young Americans seemed to herald a new era in the theater, one which would put an end to the dominance of the psychological drama of Arthur Miller and Tennessee Williams. Two years later they were joined by Arthur Kopit, whose Pop-surrealist "Oh Dad, Poor Dad, Mamma's Hung You in the Closet and I'm Feelin' So Sad," staged by Jerome Robbins, was the Off Broadway sensation of the 1962 season. The critics quickly hailed him as one of the promising new group of rebel playwrights.

Today, all four playwrights are still trying, with varying degrees of dedication, to fulfill their promise. Yet they have not done so. Even Edward Albee, who, despite his excellent early plays, despite his phenomenal financial success with "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" and despite his recent Pulitzer Prize, has failed to achieve that dynamic, ongoing relationship which exists between a major playwright and his audience. Although Albee's last play, "Seascape," brought him honors, it did not bring him the electric response of an audience. Indeed, in his effort to reconnect with his public, Albee was forced to revive the 14-year-old "Virginia Woolf," the one play he has written that has puzzled the imagination of the public.

What went wrong? Is it the fault of the critics, who perhaps overpraised fairly modest talents from whom little was to be expected? Or did early adulation spoil the four playwrights? Or did they simply lack the stamina? Or did the theater somehow let them down?

In an effort to learn the answer to these questions, I visited each of the four playwrights recently and puzzled with them over their careers.

Before reporting what they are doing today, let me deal for a moment with their early reception.

It has been said that America either starves her playwrights or destroys them with early adulation. In general, neither was true for this particular group of playwrights. Although "The Connection" was hailed in Europe with frenzied excitement when Judith Malina and Julian Beck's Living Theater brought it there on tour, the New York critics were at first hostile, truthfully reporting that Gelber's play was full of dirty words and characters who talked about nothing but getting a fix. Indeed the play was panned until Kenneth Tynan, then drama critic for The New Yorker, declared it "the most exciting new play Off Broadway has produced since the War" and other weekly magazine critics substantially agreed. Albee's "The Zoo Story" also received mixed reviews at first, with many critics attacking the playwright for pessimism, beatnikism and an overly melodramatic ending. Robert Brustein, then writing for the New Republic, detected "sexual-religious claptrap" and "masochistic-homosexual perfume," but rather grudgingly admitted that Albee had "a powerful dramatic talent." Richardson, also, did not inspire critical ecstasy, although The Times critic Howard Taubman judiciously described him as "an important new talent in the theater." Despite the enthusiasm generated by Kopit's play, a number of critics perceived a thinness behind the theatrical pleasures of Barbara Harris's performance as the mother and Jerome Robbins's clever cartoon-like staging. A poor movie starring Rosalind Russell was later made of "Oh Dad."

And thus, it does not appear that the failures or semi-failures which followed the initial successes of Gelber, Richardson Albee and Kopit can be fairly attributed to the notion that they were over-rated in the first place.

Furthermore, one cannot say that they simply ran out of steam. This summer, I found Albee about to bring out two new "chamber plays"—"Listening" and "Counting the Ways"—as well as busy working on a play about marriage, a social institution which, he says, is not obsolete—"it's just that the rules change—the play is about how the rules change." While Albee was working in solitary splendor in his Montauk home high on a bluff overlooking the sea, Gelber and Kopit worked on new plays in workshop situations. Gelber's new play, titled "Jack Gelber's New Play: Rehearsal," concerns exploitation in the theater and is scheduled to open the season at the American Place Theater on West 46th Street. Meanwhile, Kopit was working alongside 11 aspiring playwrights at the O'Neill Theater Center at Waterford, Conn., revising a play entitled "Secrets of the Rich." The work was originally conceived as a Broadway melodrama which failed and is now becoming a somewhat "absurdist" tragi-farce about a rich man who must kill a nice girl for obscure reasons.

Even Richardson, who has in recent years avoided the theater, except as a drama critic for Commentary, is considering finishing a play about "the last days of a great American poet, someone like John Berryman." He elaborates: "I received a Rockefeller grant to finish it, so I suppose I will. It would probably be done at the American Place later in the season."

The convenient explanations, then—that they were spoiled or simply gave up—readily do not work. The difficulty these dramatists experienced, I have come to believe after talking with them and thinking about their plight, is that while their artistic statements were exciting in the early 1960's when they won recognition, a sudden shift in the mood of radical protest made them seem dated and uninteresting.

Each of the four playwrights was philosophically forged in the Beat era, which was individualistic and essentially apolitical. Each projected heroes who were psychic rebels against insidious, pervasive conformism. Gelber's characters in "The Connection" had created their own world in the drug subculture. Richardson's modernized Orestes in "The Prodigal" fiercely struggled to resist Fate, viewed in 50's terms as social convention. Albee in his serious way and Kopit in his antic one projected their vision of the savage onslaught of the upper middle class family on its young.

Then radical protest suddenly turned a full 180 degrees away from a concern with the suffering individual victim of society to an aggressive attack against the

Over the past ten years, Shakespeare-going audiences in England and America have grown accustomed to seeing productions that have offered less and less of Shakespeare, and more and more of directors' ideas of what Shakespeare is about. In the 1960's, Peter Brook's spectacular, acrobatic "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Clifford Williams' all-male staging of "As You Like It" for Britain's National Theater and Joseph Papp's counterculture carnivals at the New York Shakespeare Festival in Central Park all set the pace for Shakespearean outings in which the director, rather than the bard, had a field day.

Not so with Michael Kahn, since 1969 the artistic director of the 22-year-old American Shakespeare Festival.

What Does Tomorrow Hold for 'Today'?

By J. ANTHONY LUKAS

During a commercial break in a recent appearance on the "Today" show, Joe Garagiola wrapped a brawny arm around Jim Hartz and growled, "In the immortal words of Casey Stengel, 'What the hell is going on?'"

This is the question being asked increasingly these days by "Today's" cast, crew and production staff—not to mention its audience of some four million people. For the 24-year-old potpourri of news, interviews and entertainment—long one of the most successful programs on network television—is going through the most difficult period in its recent history, one that its new producer does not hesitate to call "an unhappy time, a period of great trauma."

Never before in its quarter century on the air has there been such a coming and a going, such a shifting of personnel and of format, such an unsettled and unsettling mood about the show.

Within the past three months, "Today" has lost its supervising vice president, its executive producer, its female host, its male host, its news reader, its Washington editor and its reporter-at-large. Indeed, the only on-air performer filling the same role he did three months ago is the show's resident wit, Gene Shalit.

"It's as if three-quarters of a baseball team had been killed in a plane crash," says a worried NBC executive, "and you had to put together a squad with new talent who had never played together before."

"Today" will start fielding its new team in earnest a week from tomorrow when the new supreme host, Tom Brokaw, replaces Jim Hartz

This 'Measure' Falls Short

Have you ever noticed how quick we are to rat on Shakespeare? Like Hollywood screenwriters, Shakespeare is approximately as good as his last production, and if the last production of, say, "As You Like It" that you saw was a real bummer, you're apt to say to yourself, though not out loud, "Well, 'Hamlet' and 'Othello' okay, but that one was written after too prolonged a binge at the Boar's Head." Confess it, you will. It doesn't matter how many times you have seen a particular play work. It's the latest mounting that lodges in your head, wiping out virtues that one or another actor or director has earlier displayed for you, and I'll take a brand new, freshly discerning job on the text—maybe six or eight years from now—to restore your faith in the play proper. Unfair, unfair, but that's human nature for you, always capable of instant exasperation.

(It can even happen to "Hamlet," the play long since voted most likely to succeed. Take me. For all the excitement I've felt at productions that were sometimes openly melodramatic, sometimes profoundly inward, and for all that I know in my heart its central figure is at once the most vivid and most complex creature ever to hasten feverishly across a platform, I did happen to see, a few years ago, three disastrous stagings of the play in three successive weeks. By the end of the bout I was ready to say good night to that sweet prince for all eternity. Later, of course, I steadied myself and decided I would go again provided neither of Ophelia's mad scenes was permitted to run for more than 20 minutes. Come to think of it, I could still do with a lot less of Ophelia, unstrung.)

Anyway, the foregoing may explain why I found myself at the opening of the Delacorte's "Measure for Measure" in Central Park—actually jostling down the following Junot, most inconsiderate, note: "Is this Shakespeare's worst lot?" Of course it's not ("Timon of Athens" would have to be given due thought here), and certainly I've seen a number of provocative performances of "Measure for Measure" down the years. But whatever else director John Pasquin may be doing to Shakespeare's study of corruption, high and low, in Vienna, he is certainly calling forcible attention to the one thing we don't want to face up to in the play, Shakespeare heated.

You will remember the bare bones of the plot—good bare bones to begin with. The Duke of Vienna (Sam Waterston, looking like Dante for openers and, once he has disgusted himself in monk's cowl and robes, resembling The Blob in a sci-fi film) turns his administration over to the sternly punctilious Angelo (Goin Cazale, straight out of the "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari") so that he, the Duke, can observe the effects of a stern reign. Angelo at once begins imprisoning and promising to behead transgressors of any moral law, sexual offenders especially, and his dragnet sweeps up the juvenile Claudio, who has merely got his pretty fiancée pregnant. Claudio has a sister who is a novice in a convent (rather unfortunately, designer Santo Loquasto has provided a white tile background that makes the convent seem to be located just outside the men's lavatory) and, quite naturally, brother appeals to sister to intervene on his behalf. Her unmistakable chastity should carry some weight. That very chastity, however, unexpectedly arouses the slumbering beast in Angelo, and, first thing you know, he's offering the girl a bargain: if she'll sleep with him, he'll let her brother live.

She will have none of it and reports the base offer to her brother, in prison, Claudio is at once on his knees to her, begging her to save his life at whatever cost to her ideals.

Perfect hind for the girl, psychologically, emotionally, religiously. All the key scenes thus far have been potentially striking ones, with a rigid moralist suddenly revealing the lusts he must have long bottled up, a principled virgin defending her body and her beliefs with surprising force, a groveling but quite understandable brother arguing that even such a price for a life is a small one to pay. If the actors have played the scenes well, we should feel the crunch now. The girl's alternatives are impossible, yet she must choose one. What are the relative ethics of the given situation? The emotional costs, either way? And, above all, what decision is the girl going to make?

As it happens, the girl makes no decision at all, which means that the pressures that have built up around her simply burst like pretty soap bubbles. It's that Duke, who's been snooping around town in his melted-candlewax disguise and is now prepared to slip sideways into the dilemma and, by means of some hocus-pocus that is extremely complicated and partly comic, simply blow it all away. Rarely has a playwright built his people, and the rest of us, up to so tantalizing a crisis—will she, won't she?—and then washed his hands of it. And it was Shakespeare who did it. It's as though, halfway through "Hamlet," he'd had Horatio arrive with incontrovertible evidence that Claudius had nothing to do with the death of Hamlet's father, leaving everybody with no occupation for the rest of the evening but to play cute little tricks on Gertrude.

But still, if the principals play the key scenes for the power and nuance that is in them, and if some way can be found to relate the master-minding Duke meaningfully to the human-sexual experiment he has set in motion, the sense of collapse can be delayed, if not ingeniously avoided altogether. Unhappily the principals at the Delacorte, though we have seen them do good work in other circumstances, never do play the scenes; they play the speeches, the lines, in frosty isolation from one another.

Mr. Cazale stalks about in his early German Expressionist way, copper-toned and scowling, without in the least hinting a growing attachment to novice Meryl Streep. We never do know when his libido gets the best of him and are simply forced to listen to his Charlie McCarthy voice—all of the performers are badly body-mimed, giving us the feeling that we're receiving radio messages from their teeth, but Mr. Cazale is the most unfortunate—until he gets an immediate "No" from his intended victim. Miss Streep, so woefully effective earlier this season in Tennessee Williams' "Twenty-seven Wagons Full of Cotton," is very quick with her "No," so quick that she has uttered it and launched into a harangue almost before we've grasped the proposition. There are no transitional values in the sequence; the girl does not begin in supplication and find her way to defiance. She seems intent on winning an argument right off, rather forgetting that she ought to be putting in a good word for her brother.

David Haskell is a bit better as Claudio, but since his sister's mind seems so thoroughly made up before she has entered his jail cell, she has very little occasion to listen to him. No give-and-take here, just independent tirades. And, alas, Sam Waterston is worst of all in the admirably difficult role of the Duke, so fussed and fuddled by the apparently shapeless part that he spends most of his time readjusting his cowl and bending himself double so that he will not be recognized by total strangers. His work is aimless and wandering when it should be asserting total control, and the second half of the evening can't hope to survive that. As so often happens at the Delacorte, the supporting players tend to fare better than the leads: Ron Randall as a straightforward, well-spoken chamberlain, Howard E. Rollins Jr. as a plump who looks like a silver pirate, Robin Mary Paris as Claudio's cheerfully pregnant friend. The broad horizontal platforms that Mr. Loquasto has laid out for the occasion while the Delacorte is preparing for reconstruction are far too diffuse for a play that is trying to tie a central knot, but an overhead panel of what I take to be prophetic soaring ideas on bat-wings (unswathed Chagall?) provides an agreeable distraction from the resolute white tile benches.

And now do you promise to have faith in "Measure for Measure," no matter how feckish your latest exposure to it may seem? It will be done again, no doubt at Joseph Papp's Delacorte (currently celebrating its 20th useful birthday), and next time, next time, you may be showing how wrong you were.

"Measure for Measure," by William Shakespeare. At the Delacorte.

The Lovable Doll in 'Guys and Dolls'

By JUDY KLEMESRUD

In real life, Norma Donaldson has a sensual, throaty voice, is partial to stylish tea gowns, and seems sophisticated. But as Adelaide, the showgirl "Guys and Dolls," she comes girlishly onto the stage of the Broadway Theatre in a curly wig and a too-tight dress, cooing in a high-pitched baby-talk voice to a man who is suffering from a psychosomatic post-nasal drip because, after being engaged for 14 years, he still can't get him to marry her.

Miss Donaldson, who is somewhere in her 30's and once seriously considered becoming a nun, has emerged as perhaps the brightest of the four stars of the all-black revival of the 1950 Frank Loesser musical about small-time gamblers, showgirls and Salvation Army saviors.

"Norma Donaldson is an endearing delight as Miss Adelaide," wrote Clive Barnes of The Times. "Norma Donaldson finds the intelligence behind Adelaide's gullibility; she makes this lady's endearingness enormously endearing," wrote Mel Gussow in the Sunday Times. "A contagiously alive performer, Norma Donaldson has every kind of presence: presence of mind, stage presence and just plain presence, the quality of being as powerfully there even when doing nothing as a stop sign on a highway," wrote John Simon in New York Magazine.

This is, in fact, Miss Donaldson's first big success in show-business career that etches back to the late '60's, when she first got a as a singer with a touring by Belafonte review. But is not bitter, she says, it took her so long to it.

"I was not bitter," she says, "I even the other day sitting in her oak-parlor in a West End brownstone that Jim Brady once I would have loved one 10 years earlier—'do I know I could do it then? All my 'd had blessed ally ready now g in my life."

The 5-foot-5-inch, 124-pound, actress said she was chosen for the part of Adelaide by Billy Wilson, the show's director, who was familiar with her past work as a singer-dancer. He told her to play Adelaide as "a light character," and she took it from there.

"In the beginning of rehearsals, some people told me she was dumb," Miss Donaldson said, bristling. "I resented that. Adelaide is not dumb, she's naive. There's a certain innocence about her, even though she's been working at the Hot Box nightclub for 14 years. Nathan Detroit is the only man who's ever been in her life. She eats, drinks and sleeps Nathan Detroit [played by Robert Guillaume.] You know, I really love Adelaide, because she's basically a very positive person. She's positive, she's naive, she's innocent, yet she's wise, but not necessarily booklearned. And most of all, she's lovable. And that's what I try to get across."

Miss Donaldson, who was wearing no makeup except for an enormous pair of sapphire false eyelashes, said she had not seen "Guys and Dolls" before in any version, and that she had met only once with her famous predecessor in the role, Vivian Blaine. "That was on opening night," she said. "We really didn't have much time to talk, but she did say she thought I had given a marvelous performance, and I liked that. I wondered how she felt sitting out there with someone else doing the role. I'm very protective of Adelaide, and I wonder how I'd feel."

Although the show is 26 years old and was written with a largely Jewish flavor, Miss Donaldson said she thinks it is by no means outdated. "I think it is very right now," she said. "The same experiences are happening to people now, the gambling, the nightclubs, the difficult relationships. It really isn't a period piece at all. The only awkwardness was in the writing, because it had a lot of Jewish references. But my part wasn't affected much at all; it's almost exactly as it was originally written."

When asked to describe her creative process, Miss Donaldson said she liked to use "an experience from life" to get her effects. "For example, when I played a dying prostitute in the movie, 'Willie Dynamite,' I kept thinking, 'What can I do that will make this scene work? What can I do? So I thought of my mother, and how she looked three years ago when she was dying from a stroke. Excuse me, this is very difficult for me. [Tears well in her eyes.] There's a thing about how you lose control of the tongue and mouth muscles. Maybe it's gruesome, but I used it."

Norma Donaldson: "I feel totally ready now to do anything in my life."

aldson said she liked to use "an experience from life" to get her effects. "For example, when I played a dying prostitute in the movie, 'Willie Dynamite,' I kept thinking, 'What can I do that will make this scene work? What can I do? So I thought of my mother, and how she looked three years ago when she was dying from a stroke. Excuse me, this is very difficult for me. [Tears well in her eyes.] There's a thing about how you lose control of the tongue and mouth muscles. Maybe it's gruesome, but I used it."

"In Adelaide, I used only a love for a human being—Nathan," she went on. "Adelaide makes herself exist only for Nathan. But if someone would say, 'Are you a Methodist actress?' I wouldn't know how to answer. The only thing I want to do as an actress is have you believe everything I say to you, totally, mentally, physically, in every way."

Miss Donaldson smiled wryly when asked to recall the early days of rehearsals, when Abe Burrows, co-author of the show and supervisor of the all-black version, was constantly present to give direction and advice to Mr. Wilson.

"It was a most amusing sight," she said. "There wasn't a feud or anything, just two different kinds of personalities. Abe was all over, all over, that's his personality, and he was whispering, whispering to Billy, who is usually very calm. It would have driven me crazy. But mostly, Abe seemed like a little boy with a lollipop. His past was suddenly his present again with different sounds and different colors. You could actually feel him reliving something. I think it must have been a great thrill for him to hear the music sung and touched on like it had never been done before."

Although some critics have questioned the validity of all-black shows (or all-white shows, for that matter) on the grounds that reality is integrated, Miss Donaldson strongly defends the approach.

"An all-black cast is valuable in terms of identity," she said. "It gives black people dignity. When I see black people turn out for 'Guys and Dolls,' I'm thrilled. It gives me an even better feeling in the world, and what gives me an even better feeling is that both races are leaving the theatre saying they had a good time."

Miss Donaldson was born in Harlem, to a father who died while she was still an infant, and a "very strict" mother, who was a baby nurse. "All my life we were inseparable," she says of her

can Shakespeare Theatre in Stratford, Conn. "I'm less interested in using Shakespeare as a vehicle for my own perceptions," said the fortyish, Brooklyn-born director one morning recently, "and more interested in exploring Shakespeare's perceptions. I want to express them to the audience as fairly as possible, and let them make up their minds."

Kahn—tall, dark, patrician featured, smooth of manner and pate—was sipping tea and unwinding on a small Victorian sofa in the living-room of his on-the-greens house at Stratford, a tiny red cottage that housed Katharine Hepburn when she played there in the 1950's. It was the morning after the opening of Kahn's production of "As You Like It" with English actress Eileen Atkins, which will run in repertory with "The Winter's Tale" and Arthur Miller's "The Crucible" through Sept. 28.

A dramatic anthology, "Love and Master Will," starring Christopher Plummer and Zoe Caldwell, will join the other plays when it opens on Sept. 3.

Kahn elaborated on his ideas about Shakespeare as he analyzed his "As You Like It." "This is a post-Jean Kott production," he explained. The reference was to the ambivalent interpretation given Rosalind's masquerading as a boy by Polish scholar Jan Kott, an interpretation closely adhered to in Clifford Williams' all-male version of the play. "In that sense, this production is radical." We had all those productions about sexual confusion in the 1960's. I have a girl playing Rosalind, not, as in Shakespeare's time, a boy. She's a woman with very deep feelings, and Orlando is very much in love with her. Today, "As You Like It" can't be about Orlando being in love with a girl who's played by a boy who's playing a girl. It's just not the truth."

Kahn's choice of "Love and Master Will" to close the summer season at Stratford is also expressive of his rather practical, down-to-earth approach to producing Shakespeare. The play—a two-person evening of Shakespearean scenes and sonnets dealing with human relationships, devised and staged by Christopher Plummer and Introduced at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C.—might seem a somewhat lightweight event for a theater of Stratford's stature. The Theatre's much-publicized financial crisis could well account for the choice, and not just because Plummer and Zoe Caldwell will draw crowds.

"Listen," said Kahn in his soft-spoken, but at times rapid-fire manner, "Zoe and Chris are terrific performers. I'd rather have them here in a play as opposed to an evening." But he simply didn't have the money to mount four productions on our own this season. As it was, Kahn was deprived of his usual guest directors due to low budget and little rehearsal time and directed the three other plays himself.

All of these might seem like conservative, even commercial ideas coming from a man who made his reputation in New York's avant-garde theater of the 1960's. Kahn apparently saw no disparity between then and now as he related his background. "Edward Albee and Joe Papp are responsible for me," he said with a smile. Albee produced his staging of Adrienne Kennedy's "Fumyhouse of a Negro" Off Broadway, which won awards. Kahn then worked at Theater La Mama—premiering Jean-Claude van Itallie's "Motel"—and at the Playwright's Unit. Joseph Papp saw his production of Adrienne Kennedy's "The Owl Answers" at the Theater DeLys, and in 1966 tapped him to direct "Measure for Measure" at the Shakespeare Festival in Central Park. The production was an Obie winner, garnering Kahn a Saturday Review award for best director of a revival.

True to his Off Broadway origins, Kahn's first productions at Stratford were radical, often one-dimensional readings of the text. In 1967, as guest director, he staged "The Merchant of Venice" as a reflection of "my feelings about the 1960's. I made the Venetians dreadful, only caring about money and treating each other as objects. I was so involved in doing that when I got to the beautiful scene at the end of the play—the 'On such a night' speech between Jessica and Lorenzo—I had to make the characters drunk to do the lines, because I didn't think these two people could possibly have any poetry in them."

His artistic transformation came about, Kahn believes, while he was directing a 1970 production of "All's Well That Ends Well." "I saw Joe Papp's production in Central Park and thought, what a terrific black comedy it is—what an ironic, ugly play! When I read it, I was surprised—I realized it had its cynicism, but it also had its romanticism. As I worked on the play, it started to dictate its own reality. Shakespeare's characters are inconsistent—they're pre-Romantic and pre-Strandian—but then, as we've finally come to learn in the 20th century, we are inconsistent. I began to think that to work on Shakespeare from one particular viewpoint was to deny the richness of his plays."

"This may make people think I don't have any conception at all," he continued. "American critics in general haven't seen as much Shakespeare as English or European critics. They look for large, general conceptions, rather than identifying what is new in the production, what new insights the director and actors may have had, what original textual readings have been developed."

"But at the heart of Shakespeare is language—rhythm, stress, meaning. I've been concerned with American actors and audiences getting involved with that language—making it their own, without denying the fact that it is still in verse, still 'Shakespearean.' When I started, there were two ways of doing Shakespeare in America—first, butchering the text, which comes from the method, where 'talkin' well is phony,' and second, the watered-down Gielgud style practiced by American actors who went to RADA or LAMDA and came back with English technique. My idea of American Shakespeare is to try to bring the same kind of life and reality to it that you would to a modern play, but doing it through the text."

In Kahn's artistic stance at Stratford is now adamantly middle-of-the-road; it may be because he is currently devoting much of his creative energy to his dream of commanding a year-round repertory theater. His appointment in 1974 as producing director at Princeton University's McCarter Theatre helped toward fulfilling that dream. "Stratford and McCarter feed each other," said Kahn. "Stratford closes at the end of the summer, the McCarter opens for the winter. This physical proximity and differing demands of the theaters have worked out wonderfully."

Due to an adventurous audience—"they must watch less television down there in New Jersey"—Kahn has been able to stage a season of relatively unknown plays at McCarter, including O'Neill's "Beyond the Horizon," "Pity She's a Whore" or Brecht's "Mother Courage and Her Children," and still have subscriptions double from $200 to $400 over a two-year period. "The state of New Jersey has given McCarter really healthy financial support," Kahn said with satisfaction. This season's repertory, which begins on October 5th, is ambitious, including Shaw's "Major Barbara" with Maria Tucci, the world premiere of a new Sam Shepard play "Angel City" and "A Streetcar Named Desire."

The director's dream of a close, creative relationship between Stratford and McCarter may continue to be only that, if Stratford's financial health does not improve. The $300,000 needed to open the 1978 season was raised through a crisis campaign soliciting contributions from corporations—"who," said Kahn, "are finally beginning to realize their role as patrons of the arts"—and the private sector, "with thousands of small donations." Also helping was a 1975 Ford Foundation Grant promising the Theatre the first endowment in its history—$835,000—if at the fiscal end of each year of a five-year program it is able to replace cash flow funding grant installments totalling $974,927. Kahn, meanwhile, has been making economies from within, "using a smaller company—35 actors as opposed to 45 or 50—and doing productions in a less spectacular way. This has not just been for economy. As I said, I wanted to concentrate on the text and create a kind of chamber production that would work in this very large theater."

With inflation continually skyrocketing, operating costs and a long-term indebtedness that includes a $450,000 mortgage, the future of the American Shakespeare Theatre is anything but assured. Still, Kahn—once the young Turk about Stratford—seems to be maturing gracefully, and philosophically, under pressure.

"Cynicism is a function of youth, isn't it?" he reflected. "You come out of your adolescence, you find life isn't what you were told, and you're very cynical and pleased with yourself. But I no longer feel betrayed. I continually see two sides to an issue—now, or three. And that is what attracts me to Shakespeare—his fullness of vision."

Finney and Roberts in "Alpha Beta"—Theirs is an "extraordinary duel."

We have seen better movies this year than "Alpha Beta" but, with the possible exception of Liv Ullmann's work in "Face to Face," no acting to match the extraordinary duel between Albert Finney and Rachel Roberts.

It is nothing but warfare from beginning to end, this harrowing breakup of a working-class marriage, and enclosed within the space of two rooms. But it is not just the gunfire—if it were, it would be simply two bravura bits of declamation and we couldn't stand it. It is the misfires, the pauses, the false truces, the evasions, the reapplying, even the war jokes.

Rachel Roberts, her long upper lip lifting and falling like a barometer of internal weather, alternates between quick, optimistic movements as she papers a wall or pulls out a birthday present, and the leaden gestures with which she butters a huge stack of sandwiches while screaming at her husband, Albert Finney, chunky, working-class, with an untutored intellectual hunger, suddenly takes on a physical lightness as he delivers a naive, moving critique on the institution of marriage. His tension eases, as if theorizing were a rest from the specifics of battle; a soldier discussing Clausewitz in the foxhole.

At one point, they attack each other physically. As they thrash on the floor, each conveys a specific and differing emotion. She claws toward him, not so much aiming to strike as with the gesture of someone trying to tear back possessions scattering in the wind. He hits out, this big man, with tiny maiming blows, as if trying to rid himself of a clinging horror.

But some of the most telling acting comes when one or the other is not doing or saying something but registering the effect of what is being done or said. Each, attacking, falters and breaks. When he tells her he wants a separation, she, having snatched up her purse to storm out of the room, looks at it as if she didn't recognize it and puts it very slowly back on the table. His self-assurance collapses when she tells him she was on the point of poisoning herself and their two children. The war is total, and yet their awareness of each other is total: It is the ability of the two to register this awareness so constantly that gives greatness to their acting.

And of all the particular achievements the single most grand is silence and motionlessness. Miss Roberts, after her husband has left and comes back only for weekly visits, is destroyed. Up to then she moved and talked constantly. Now she spends her time sunk into an armchair, speaking in monosyllables, chin in hand, one finger playing continually on her mouth. Her face has become a boneyard.

Splendid acting of a very different kind can be seen in Bernard Tavernier's "The Clockmaker." As in any good French film, the actors are so tangible and natural that instead of being cast in their roles they seem to have been harvested from them.

The star is Philippe Noiret as the cautious, thoughtful, comfortable clockmaker whose life gets at through his one vulnerable point: his revolutionary son. The son commits a murder and disappears, and suddenly the whole world—seen by Mr. Tavernier in radical, disaffected terms—seems to crash in on the father. The instruments of state and social power—the police and the press—try to enlist him. He reacts and wavers and reflects until at the end this deliberate man has identified himself deliberately with his son and his son's cause.

M. Noiret, stout, slow, with a long, mournful face, builds his role around his own internal processes. At an early convivial scene with friends in a restaurant the others eat; he seems, rather, to be digesting. After the murder everyone—police, reporters, friends—press ideas and advice on him. He listens, and says little, and lies heavily on his back in bed to think. As if it were a pregnancy, you see him growing and swelling with his new belief: that instead of being on the side of society he must be on the side of its rebels.

Out of this waiting and listening, his actions gather dramatic force. Indolent, he begins to take walks. In an access of fury, he pursues and beats up two men who have broken his shop window. He has lived by his stomach—the movie is set in Lyons, which is France's stomach—and with small gestures he begins to push away plates of food. Each rejected sausage is an act of dissidence.

Finney and Roberts use a wide range of gesture and color and volume. Noiret uses a very subdued range. Yet, in each case the intensity, directed inward before coming out in particular tones and actions, is total. And the camera, built to see such things, reveals it.

Noiret in "The Clockmaker"—"His intensity is total."

FILM VIEW

Now for Some Good Actors

Richard Eder

Acting and acting have a lot in common—acting is, in part, performing—but there is an important distinction. The essence of performance is delivering a blow. The essence of acting is giving it. Listening, registering, reacting: these are the heart of stage acting. Never mind the actors must deliver them, of course, but what we actors is not so much the winds they create as bend to. That is why Hamlet is such an unreactive to nothing except a ghost and his own view of the victim staggering and falling, not of the man pulling the trigger.

We think of Bogart as a figure who does something. But the essence of Bogart was his eyes hooding, his head bobbing as Peter Lorre tried to convince him that the moon was made of green cheese and could be sold advantageously in Bucharest.

Last week, discussing examples of bad or non-acting in recent movies, we mentioned the need for the screen actor to show that he or she is thinking and listening. With the several instances of splendid acting that follow, this thinking, listening, receiving aspect is particularly important.

Take a small example, first of all. The weaknesses of "The Ritz," a screen version of the stage comedy about a man taking refuge in a bathhouse patronized by homosexuals, have been spelled out by this and other reviewers. It contained a profusion of uninteresting or only mildly interesting performances, notably one by Jack Weston as the hapless heterosexual refugee. There was a very good performance by Rita Moreno as a singing spit-cat. It was performing, not acting.

But there was also a moment of real acting by one of the cast, F. Murray Abramson. Mr. Abramson was one of the bathhouse queens, and for part of the time he puts on a broad and campy performance replete with eyeshadow, strings of beads and floating veils. But in the latter part of the film, as a kind of middleman in the parade of double-takes and mistaken identities, he changes. He becomes the quizzical quiet center of the mock storm: as Mr. Weston booms and Jerry Stiller rants, Mr. Abramson swivels. He is the weird, impassive spectator whose face, moving left-to-

Roeg: The Man Behind 'The Man Who Fell To Earth'

than that of any one of those Dartmouth students.

When Mr. Rugoff purchased the American distribution rights to the film for $800,000—"more money than we ever put up before"—he took a print to Dartmouth and showed it to a group of students. After the screening, the students were asked if they would recommend the film to a friend. Half of them said yes, half said no. From that point on, Mr. Rugoff began to worry about his investment. Since, as he said, "We bought it with the right to cut it, subject to the approval of the producers," he asked Robert Young who wrote the screenplay for "Nothing But a Man" and Ed Beyer, a film editor, to cut the film. He liked the new version (which was about 20 minutes shorter), but Mr. Rugoff didn't. Then Mr. Rugoff called in Dr. Simons. He had recommended to him by a New York psychiatrist. Dr. Simons happened to be in Baltimore at a convention. He came to New York, saw the full film and liked it up until the end.

"I felt the whole thing began to deteriorate," said Dr. Simons. "I couldn't grasp where it was going. I told Rugoff I thought it was a disaster." Mr. Rugoff then showed him the cut version.

"It was amazing. I had a completely different reaction. All the scenes I had trouble with had been eliminated." Mr. Rugoff released the shortened film in America. The film, which had already received mixed but strong notices in London in the Roeg version, opened in New York in the Rugoff version and drew a similar response.

I have seen both versions of the film, which makes me a member of a small, not entirely compatible, club. Basically the film is the same in each version, following the fall and decline of a space man on earth. Mr. Newton (David Bowie) is an electronics wizard and mysterious tycoon, somewhat on the order of Howard Hughes. The film shows the impact of Earth on him and his effect on earthlings, especially his mistress, Mary Lou (Candy Clark), a disillusioned scientist named Dr. Bryce (Rip Torn) and a lawyer (Bock Henry) who becomes head of Newton's corporate empire.

There are four principal cuts in the Rugoff version of the film. Mr. Tom's character is still depicted as a ravaging womanizer but his sexual exploits have been pruned. Also deleted is a scene in which Mary Lou is so terrified by seeing Newton change back into a space man that she urinates. In the Roeg version Mary-Lou visits Newton in a hospital-hotel where he is a prisoner and he threatens her with a revolver, and then makes love to her. The Rugoff version simply cuts the gun and the love-making and skips to a ping pong game between Newton and Mary Lou.

The first two trims seem justified, a toning down of overstatement. The fourth scene which was trimmed—a glimpse of Mr. Tom dressed as Santa Claus—seems irrelevant. The only questionable cut is the gun scene. Mr. Rugoff and his advisers felt that in that sequence, one "lost sympathy" for the two principals, that Newton seemed jaded. That is precisely Mr. Roeg's point: "They aren't young people any more. As they get older, the likelihood of extra aids to eroticism is brought in. Newton has become totally human." The scene is jarring, but no more so than much that has preceded it in a film that tries to be disassociative. It adds an edge to Newton's character but it does not change the essential nature of the film. The story leads—more quickly in the Rugoff version—to the final confrontation between a worn-out Newton and a disconsolate Bryce, who apologizes to the space man for the cruel treatment he has suffered on Earth. Newton brushes off the apology. If Bryce had visited his planet, he says, he would have been treated the same way. The stranger abused in an alien land (see Polt's "Plot") is the real subject of both versions of the film.

Mr. Roeg is as disturbed by the fact of the cutting as he is by the specific cuts. Throughout his career, he says, "I've been dogged with different versions. Before, everything was cut on grounds of censorship. That's a dying cause, so now things are cut on cultural grounds; certain things accepted in Europe are not considered acceptable for Americans. Having tried to push the structure of film grammar into a different area, I find myself explaining it, the reason why certain things are in. Whenever one plays with film grammar, it offends people.

Asked how he changed the film grammar, he said, "Basically, by taking away the crutch of time, which the audience usually holds onto. Some movies will say an event is taking place now, and then, three months later there is another event. But time is much more instant.

I think the film is rather like a lifetime which goes in fits and starts. At the end of people's lives, it is difficult to find what the actual story is. Life is not as simple as "The Forsyte Saga." Things happen, time goes by, and nothing happens—then, a crucial moment! With saga movies, every event seems to link to another event." Mr. Roeg asks the audience to relax, to "read the screen," and to let the movie "work on them." Clearly, Mr. Rugoff felt that the audience needed help; at one point he even considered adding a prologue asking for their indulgence.

Despite the disjointed style and bizarre subject matter, Mr. Roeg thinks that his picture is telling a traditional story. Five years ago, when he first read the novel by Walter Tevis on which the movie is based, he was attracted by the central character, "a person alone outside society . . . and the people who become attached to him." Although the movie is science-fiction, it is not about "little green men and lots of dials and apparatuses." The idea was "to set a human drama against a fantastic background." On one level, it is a "love story," one not so far removed from "Love in the Afternoon," the Gary Cooper-Audrey Hepburn movie which Mr. Newton watches on television. In fact, the dialogue in that movie is echoed in the conversations between Newton and Mary Lou. Mr. Newton need not be a space man. He could, in fact, be an "hallucinating" Howard Hughes.

"You in the audience think perhaps he's from outer space. I don't think that's definite. Perhaps he's from inner space. All we see is what's in his mind." Repeatedly, Newton's mind drifts back to his previous life—to his wife and two children, strange, plasticized creatures he left behind when he fell to Earth. He is a time, as well as space, traveler, and occasionally his mind darts back to the past; driving through the American West, suddenly he sees a pioneer family. These scenes, theorizes Mr. Roeg, could be imagined. The only presumably conclusive evidence that he is extraterrestrial is that he cannot be photographed by an X-ray camera. But even that, according to Mr. Roeg is "not beyond the realm of possibility." The point is that, space man or not, Mr. Newton is a traveler, an outsider. "If you forget the fantastical side of the story, you can draw a parallel to a man emigrating to America."

To play the stranger, Mr.

Roeg chose a man from outside movies, David Bowie. "There is a difficult line between who is an actor and who is not. One third of the shows on television come from the audience, people acting out some kind of thing on game shows. Bowie has a totally uninfluenced originality—uninfluenced by previous roles, or by fear. That's the great hallmark of his originality and I think that's the quality I saw in Mr. Newton, too."

Mr. Roeg seems drawn to strange situations and exotic locations, such as the Australian outback of "Walkabout" and the occult mysteries of "Don't Look Now." "The things one is drawn to," he said, "might appear alien to a lot of people," but from his point of view they're simply themes that concern him, themes that can be made more interesting if they are set in odd places.

Though each of the films is very individual, they are all, he said, a reflection of him. "Everyone has things he wants to get out of his mind. I suppose I've always been interested in the idea of the time machine. The closest to the time machine we have is the movies. I always wanted to make movies."

Mr. Roeg's first movie job, in 1947, was working in the cutting room for a documentary film maker. He thought this might lead to a job with M-G-M, but it only led to an M-G-M of the mind; he began plotting movies in his head. Then he became a cameraman, working on "Petulia," "Far From the Madding Crowd" and "Fahrenheit 451." Soon he found himself pigeonholed—behind a camera. To himself, he was always a director.

With his fourth movie finally bringing him a degree of international recognition, he now has a greater freedom in choosing properties. Among his future possibilities is a disaster movie, but he says that whatever he chooses to do next, "I'd like to think it will be something about obsession." He smiles. "Obsession and fear go hand in hand."

It was late in the afternoon and he got up from his chair to pour a sherry. Looking around his study, I noticed that in addition to Polt's plots, he had numerous books on myths, and I asked him if they had any relevance to his work. "You've put your finger on it," he said, brightening. "I like myth very much. I like to get as close to dramatic reality as possible, and I also like the Show that myth can give."

DANCE VIEW

'Are We Looking To the Future?'

The other day there was a celebration in London commemorating the 50th anniversary of the Ballet Rambert. The anniversary also celebrated a ballet, the very first ballet, by Frederick Ashton called "The Tragedy of Fashion."

Rambert was the first to realize this—but this fantastic woman has been a first in many things. She is one of the people I admire most in the world, and one of the women I love most in the world.

That, of course, is not really what this essay is about. That was simply a fervent, if very belated, love letter to an old friend, although still young woman. And I do adore her. I adore her taste, her achievement, her ability, and, for we are all very frail, I adore most the fact that she was sweet, loving, bitter and educative to me in the dance world when I was just a nothing hanger-on.

The fire-breath threads of Rambert's taste have spread across the world. Everywhere. There is not a company in the world—I must admit our dance world does happen to be just about as incestuous as the Incas—that has not felt, perhaps without knowing it, Rambert's presence.

A Famous Festival Flirts With Greener Pastures

By ANNA KISSELGROFF

The American Dance Festival, based at Connecticut College since 1948, has kept New England's sleepy towns alert this summer.

First, there was a sudden announcement by Mayor Humphrey J. Donnelly of Newport, R.I., that if the population of New London, Conn., did not appreciate the festival—the internationally known center of American modern dance—he was ready to "hijack" it to the Rhode Island resort. Things have not gone that far. Nonetheless, today the festival begins a one-week presentation of four dance groups under its auspices in Newport—the first time it has moved from its usual setting in New London.

Another surprise announcement came from Betty Ford last week. A former student at the Bennington College summer festivals that were the current festival's ancestors, Mrs. Ford accepted the post of honorary chairman of the board of the American Dance Festival, Inc.

This is big news for the dance world. But even bigger news is the abbreviation "Inc." that has been added to the festival's title. It signals the festival's fresh status as a legal entity distinct from Connecticut College.

Charles Reinhart, the festival director, moved to incorporate the festival (as a producing organization and associated dance school) in 1975. Just before the 1976 summer session, the Internal Revenue Service granted the corporation tax-exempt nonprofit status.

This means that Reinhart can pick up the festival and take it elsewhere—which is what he is doing on a small scale this week. Tonight in Newport's Rogers High School auditorium, the festival presents the popular Pilobolus Dance Theater.

On Tuesday and Wednesday, Judith Jamison will dance Alvin Ailey's "Cry" and share the bill with the debut of the American Dance Machine, a group dedicated to preserving the dances of American musicals. The company's program will be a tribute to the late Jack Cole, one of Broadway's and Hollywood's most influential choreographers. On Thursday and Friday, performances by the Paul Taylor Dance Company will include "Polaris," a new Taylor work commissioned by the festival. Taylor did the choreography after Alex Katz, the painter, created the decor and Don York composed the music, rather than the usual vice versa.

The Newport week is being politely called an extension of the festival's regular six-week season at Connecticut College that closed on August 7. Yet in a recent interview, Reinhart implied that there might be a permanent move to Newport because of what he called a lack of community support in New London—and until this year—differences with the college about policy.

When word got out this summer that the festival might "extend" itself elsewhere in some form, representatives of two New England areas came courting. In Newport's case, Reinhart had already wooed the woovers. In the summer of 1975, a Newport delegation led by Mayor Donnelly came to New London to discuss such a move after a Newport resident who is a festival staff member had made the right connections with the resort's social, business and town leaders. The second offer to relocate came unexpectedly from a lawyer

Controlled Chaos' On Schedule At Fisher Hall

Fisher Hall and its immediate vicinity look like a disaster area. Outside where the entrance used to be is a collage of wooden and steel scaffolding, sheets of plywood, mounds of broken cement, piles of sand, stacks of cinderblock, trucks and workmen. That's outside. Inside . . . well, it's that Groucho Marx film where he pauses out to watch a workman removing his name from a sign. "What's going on here?" Groucho indignantly asks, "What's coming off here?" says the workman. Fisher Hall, originally called Philharmonic Hall, first building in Lincoln Center to open (on Sept. 19) weeks were a what's-coming-off situation. member the story—the acoustic horror tales, the years to remedy the sound, the slight in it the continuing general unhappiness of musician golden-eared patrons, and finally the Drama to rip everything out and start all over again, urgedly supplied by Avery Fisher, with Dr. Cyril Ge of the acoustics and Philip Johnson taking cultural problems and the new décor. Right after rmionic program of the season, workmen moved in. has been controlled chaos ever since. t, hot day the other week, Harris and John anaging director of Lincoln Center, were nice to this observer, who had fled New York at the through Fisher Hall and explain what was doing," said Harris, "is shooting for a hall n bass. I need not say that the hall has been s up to now. We want uniformity of sound seating areas. The hall must not be loud in it in others. We have to make the musicians to play without having to strain myself, the telling us. So the sound on the stage itself and detailed and comfortable, and directed lience. We are making a tight hall, so sound ed in holes or ducts or anything like that. A being installed. The audience will be able to addition to hearing it."

Mazzola took the visitor to the top of the auditorium and gave him a peek. The visitor gasped and blanched. The interior of the auditorium was still filled with metal scaffolding. Only part of the ceiling was in. Workmen were running every which way. The new balcony facings had only been barely started. Here it was Aug. 11, and announcements already have been sent out for the grand re-opening on Oct. 19.

Who was kidding whom? But Harris and Mazzola did not look worried. They gazed around with great satisfaction. "We're on a 24-hour day," said Mazzola, "and we are using about 250 workers a day. We do expect to be ready by Oct. 19. We also are within our budget, as far as we know." The budget is in the vicinity of $5 million.

Harris pointed out some of the future amenities. Here were the springs hanging from the roof, ready to take the ceiling. Here were the cinderblocks in position on the floor of the auditorium, all set to take the first layer of the wooden floor. Here were the recesses to take the wooden side panels. Here—and Harris went off into an involved explanation, complete with pencil, paper and diagrams—were the projected angles, curves, recesses and protuberances that would diffuse the sound for greatest effect.

As announced, Harris is designing a rectangular hall, somewhat in the Symphony Hall tradition. To everybody's surprise it turned out that the dimensions of Boston's Symphony Hall were almost identical with those of Fisher Hall. Harris was delighted. He is a traditionalist who likes traditional shapes and materials—plenty of thick plaster, wood and curtain elements.

Things are being changed downstairs, too. The restaurant has disappeared. The box-office will have a new location. The entire flow of traffic will be different. But the upstairs lobby areas, with the three balconies, will remain the same—the three "Sing-Sing promenades," as they were promptly nicknamed shortly after the hall was opened.

One has to take all this on faith. To a layman it appears as though the mess within the auditorium (and backstage, too) will not be cleaned up for years. To the professionals, all is going swimmingly along.

If the hall is ready by Oct. 19, that means it will have to be finished about a week previously, for the orchestra will have to accommodate itself to the new acoustic ambience and tests will have to be taken. Will cannons be fired off the stage? Harris was asked. He grinned. No. The acoustic testing will be done only with the orchestra itself, which will start rehearsing four or five days before the opening.

What the orchestra will discover, Harris thinks, is that an auditory and technical readjustment will have to be made. For some fifteen years now, the New York Philharmonic has been playing in a hall without much bass, which means that artificial balances have had to be maintained. It also has meant that the players of the lower-voiced instruments had to put out with might and main, almost to the point of ruptured blood vessels or intolerable pressures on bass strings. Now they are going to be playing in a hall that will have a powerful bass. If they use equivalent pressure, they will create the loudest fortissimo in the history of orchestral playing. Therefore they, and their conductors, are going to need a necessary period of reevaluation and readjustment. This was the experience of the players in the new Minneapolis hall, designed by Harris about two years ago. It took them some time to acclimatize to the big bass sound (Orchestra Hall in Minneapolis has the most powerful bass of any concert hall in the country).

Harris fully expects the new Fisher Hall to have that kind of bass. But—considering the former ills of this unfortunate hall—what makes him so sure?

Harris merely grins. He is a slight, slim man, as untroubled as a clam in the mud flats, as relaxed as a cat sunning itself on a ledge.

"After all," says Harris the acoustic traditionalist, "we're not really doing anything new."

David Lewiston records a Tibetan nomad playing the pi-wang in the Himalayas.

By STEPHEN DAVIS

The chanting of 40 Tibetan monks is a cavernous, impenetrable drone, a wall of sound. Using a secret, difficult technique termed "one-voice chording," each monk produces three notes simultaneously to form a chord. The resultant tantric ritual chant is primal and awesome, sounding at first like a swarm of angry bees and then like a landing approach to the Ultimate Note. Occasionally the rigorous, centuries-old text of the chant is interrupted by martial blasts of huge trumpets and a tintinnabulation of bells and gongs. The effect of the chant on the listener is a feeling of centering and serenity, and a connection with an endangered species of religious mystery. The soothing, hypnotic power of the chant reminds the listener that in folk culture the musician is magician, and vice-versa.

The monks, members of the Drukpa Kagyu order, escaped the 1959 Chinese invasion of Tibet and reestablished their monastery in Himchal Pradesh, India's northernmost province. Their chanting was recorded by the renowned collector David Lewiston and issued as the latest in the Nonesuch Explorer Series as "Tibetan Buddhism: Ritual Chants and Orchestra." As a recording of so-called "ethnic" music it is unique and technically brilliant, and therefore typical of the work of David Lewiston in that it captures with high fidelity the spirit of the piece as well as the content. Lewiston literally brings it back alive.

Lewiston, an Englishman in his 40's, is the most prolific recorder of tribal, primitive and trance music currently working. He is an independent producer for the Explorer Series, whose impressive catalogue of 70 albums from diverse cultures all over the planet makes it the most ambitious folklore recording project ever undertaken. And as a record producer Lewiston is known both as a near legend and an anomaly. In an age of antiseptic studios, 24-track consoles and obsessive retakes and overdubs, Lewiston prefers to record inside adobe and under thatch, and occasionally in the open air, using a standard Stellovox stereo tape machine. He very rarely requests a second take. In ten years of recording for the Explorer Series Lewiston has become a master traveller and collector.

In Central and South America Lewiston recorded paipipe choirs in Peru, fiesta ensembles in Peru and Mexico, and instrumental music in Guatemala, which he departed four days before last February's devastating quake. One of his albums, "In Praise of Oxoxala and Other Gods," investigates black curralao music in Brazil and discovers in the violent, contrapuntal drum rhythms a linear connection between West African slaves and their descendants in the New World. Lewiston has also recorded in India, Japan and Indonesia feature seasoned and swinging instrumental ensembles and piercing sweet wedding music, producing three vibrant albums of the ringing, courtly gamelan orchestras in Java and Bali, where he also taped the rarely performed Balinese fertility ritual of ketjak, the Monkey Chant.

But Lewiston's first love, both as traveller and producer, is the Himalayas and Central Asia, where he has uncovered and preserved enough hidden ritual and folk music to keep folklorists and musicologists occupied for years. Among the albums to emerge from his Himalayan expeditions are two excellent performances of tantra chants by the Tibetan monks of the Gyuto monastery in Himchal Pradesh; two albums of traditional songs and dances from Kashmir that music that is at once both ribald and properly sentiment-most creative and prolific. The series is so commercially successful that it supports him and pays for his extensive travelling.

Asked what he looks for when recording in the field, Lewiston replied, "I always go for what I feel will effortlessly bridge the culture gap. The world is full of beautiful music and I'm a pretty average westerner as far as musical tastes go, so if a certain piece appeals to me chances are that people in the West will like it too. When I'm in a new country I try to head for the high spots, and choose material that will replace. I try to maintain three criteria in the field; it should be the best music in the area, hopefully by the best musithe road. After we would finish recording the monks would put on the earphones to listen to the playback, and this pleased them terribly because they had never really heard themselves before.

"One day the abbot wanted to record the chant Sangwa Dupa, which is seven and a half hours long. I agreed, but since we were recording under a tin roof during the monsoon we decided if it began to rain we would stop. I also asked that no novices or dogs be present to cut down on extraneous noise. We got the whole thing in one take with 40 monks chanting." The monastery kept one copy of the tape as their archive, and one chapter of the chant was released by Nonesuch as "Tibetan Buddhism/Tantras of Gyuto Sangwa Dupa."

"The sad thing about Gyuto," Lewiston remarked, "is that it's no longer accessible. The monks were living in India as refugees from the Chinese and their financial situation was bad. A number of Tibetan refugee communities had asked the Dalai Lama (also in exile in India) to arrange for a monastery to settle near them. Tibetans generally speaking are very devout and used to living near a monastery. So Gyuto moved to just south of Bhutan. The Indians feel this territory is terribly strategic and travelling there isn't allowed." Here Lewiston snapped off the tape recorder to relate several horror stories concerning the Chinese occupation of Tibet, detailing torture in mountain villages and the genocide of the religious castes of Tibetan society.

When asked what problems he had encountered on his various tours, Lewiston said that in a decade of travelling he has only had serious trouble once, when he went into a Brazilian town during a fiesta without knowing anyone and had his mikes smashed up. "The things that give me the most trouble when recording are dogs, kids sometimes, and mostly car horns. You might think of Srinagar as the capital of misty, romantic Kashmir but it's also the damned auto capital of northern India. And one shouldn't minimize the physical problems that go along with extended journeys. Body things can be very heavy when travelling. Strange aches and pains and other symptoms of stress often is just the body telling the head to relax and take things easy a bit."

Lewiston's travels are also burdened by eight carrying cases of equipment. "My basic recorder is the Stellovox, and I take two of these. I use a pair of Neumann condenser mikes for indoor recordings and Omni mikes for handholding outdoors to avoid the wind factor. I also take cameras, lightweight stands for the mikes and three cases of tape, 18 hours per case."

Asked whether in his journeys he had found one musical thread which seemed to tie everything together, Lewiston laughed and said no. "That's too trippy for me. I try to take it one at a time. Besides, I'm not a musicologist. The only miracle I can say I've seen so far was the Zen master in Tibet who told me: 'My miracle is when I eat, I eat. When I sleep, I sleep.'"

"I like everybody to have a good time, to make the event of recording like a party."

Mazzola and Cyril Harris survey the acoustical rebuilding of Fisher Hall.

The Bi-State Bicentennial Committee, based in Princeton, N. J., will be the first to present the work in its entirety. Its version of "The Disappointment" opens at the Open Air Theater in Washington Crossing State Park, N. J., on Aug. 26 and plays through Aug. 28 and then Sept. 1 to 4. Rain dates are Aug. 29 and Sept. 5.

The other production is being launched by the University of Rochester's Eastman School of Music, which will stage its version of the ballad opera at the Coolidge Auditorium of the Library of Congress in Washington, D.C. on Oct. 29 and 30. A recording of the Eastman production will soon be released by Vox on its Turnabout label (TV 3-4650).

The plot of "The Disappointment" revolves around four pranksters who convince four other citizens of old Philadelphia that there is buried treasure hidden on the banks of the Delaware River. The false report of riches results in amusing conflicts and turmoil for the greedy treasure seekers. Both productions of the work are based on the two librettos by Barton, but extensive research was necessary to reconstruct or identify tunes that may have appeared in the original work since the librettos print only lyrics and not the music.

Months of musical research went into an accurate reconstruction of the work. For the Washington Crossing production, Stanley Sonntag of the Manhattanville College Music Department and Shirlee Enmons, voice teacher at Princeton University, began with 18 melodies popular during the Colonial period originally collected by Beth Flusser, co-director of the New York After Dinner Opera Company and a specialist in early American operas. During the 1930's the WPA Federal Theater had planned a production of "The Disappointment" for a Russian tour which was later cancelled. At that time several melodies were identified and harmonized in a simple, hymn-like fashion, as solo songs. Mr. Sonntag and Miss Enmons have edited and rearranged melodies from both sources into duets, trios, quartets and choruses, and, in some cases, added original music for the production, including an overture.

The musical numbers have been orchestrated for a typical complement of the period—strings, two oboes, and harpsichord. One of the highlights of both productions is the inclusion of the first published version of "Yankee Doodle." But, according to Jerald Graue, chairman of the Eastman School's musicology department, who collected the ballads for its version of "The Disappointment," "this version of 'Yankee Doodle' is far different from anything we are familiar with today." For the Eastman production, the ballads were arranged for a 13-piece instrumental en-

College has acted to channel grants into the festival, the fund raising has been done by Reinhart, who is not attached to the college. In effect, Connecticut College offered a haven to the festival, but it did not sponsor it.

When Reinhart, who became director in 1969, introduced avant-garde choreographers, there were "certain areas of conflict," he said. "The college is in the business of being a college and not an arts organization. Colleges are not the most flexible institutions in the world. And to be an arts organization, especially one with developing talent, you need a flexible institution."

There was, for example, the time Mabou Mines, an experimental drama group, thought it necessary last year to drive cars over the campus in some motorized choreography. There was also the time when college officials would not allow the dancer James Cunningham to perform in the nude.

"You need the right environment," Reinhart said. "But when artists want to run cars over the grass, you get grounds keepers who get unhappy."

"The main problem is that because the festival was never defined, there were those who looked upon it as a department of the college—like the Latin Department."

Nonetheless, Reinhart declared, "After a year of tough meetings with the college, we have come to an understanding. The problem may now be the community. They were not aware we were here. Most of the audience, after the students, comes from Providence, New Haven and Hartford, with some New Yorkers. Not from New London."

to our world. She built a great company. And she assured its succession.

There have been innumerable dance companies created in the Western world in the last 50 years. Rambert's happens to have been—in memory serves and it usually does —the first. The other architects of the new edifice of dance all came later, even Ninetta de Valois and Lincoln Kirstein.
 Of course, they were around at the time. By 1931 de Valois had started the Royal Ballet, and two years later Kirstein had laid the foundation for New York City Ballet.
 Rambert was the first, but only cartwheeling in there narrowly.

But where Rambert has been fantastic is not simply in discovering and encouraging, even at rare times feeding, two of our great choreographers, Antony Tudor and Frederick Ashton, and providing, with their help and guidance, some works for the international repertory, but also in providing a mirror for directors.

It was Ninette de Valois who pointed out that the work of a founder-director could not fairly be assessed except through his or her successors. This I believe to be a true bill. Rambert herself stood aside while her own protégé, Norman Morrice, slowly but surely removed the company from the classic dance and, as a Martha Graham adherent, developed it into a modern dance company, which is now run by his former artistic associates, John Chesworth and Christopher Bruce. Rambert has seen her company, in which she still gives artistic advice, not only change hands but change direction. She made the changeover from a phenomenon to an institution. So for that matter did Ninetta de Valois with her Royal Ballet. Now, and this is what I really want to put on the line here, what provisions are the American directors making for the future?

Retirement, and even death, are embarrassing subjects.
 But in 100 years time, George Balanchine, Lincoln Kirstein, Lucia Chase, Antony Tudor, Robert Joffrey, Gerald Arpino, Barbara Weisburger, Benjamin Harkavy and even, for that matter, Eliot Feld, the Benjamin of our classic bunch, are unlikely to be among us. The same is true in modern dance. In a century's time only Martha will be surviving, and even she will probably have changed her name.

My point is pertinent. The Ballet Rambert is 50 years old and quite happily surviving. But what is going to happen to our American companies? To be blunt, who is going to take over artistic control of American Ballet Theater, New York City Ballet, the City Center Joffrey
 Ballet, the Pennsylvania Ballet, the Feld company, et al?
 And then think of those major modern dance troupes from Martha Graham onward.

Are we looking to the future? Most of our pioneers are now—this is the way of pioneers—coming to the end of their line. And they are not really making serious provisions for the futures of the institutions they have created. It is comparatively easy to build a dance company; it only requires money and talent, combined with luck. It is comparatively easy to maintain a ballet company; it only needs much more money, a little more talent and a great deal more luck. But to sustain a company into a permanent institution demands vision. It was this vision, over these 50 years, that Rambert demonstrated. Are all those brilliantly talented directors in American ballet ever to have successors in the way Rambert has? Are they even now being trained or encouraged? I doubt it and fear it.

What Does Tomorrow Hold for 'Today'?

at the angular white desk. Gradually, during the autumn, other pieces of the puzzle will be fitted into place—a new woman to replace the departing Barbara Walters, a new Washington editor to replace Doug Kiker, and probably two new secondary figures to read commercials and do light features—so that by October a largely new "Today" show will have emerged.

The enterprise is traumatic not only because of the bruised egos of the axed performers and the nervous stomachs of the new ones but because the "Today" show has long been a linchpin of the NBC News operation, a major showcase for talent, and a prodigious drawing card for advertisers whose revenues (which in recent years have been reported to be as high as $22 million per year) has supported much of the network's other public affairs programming.

Moreover, the show has become a habit for millions of Americans—as much a part of starting the day as brushing their teeth, eating their flakes, or drinking their coffee—and they deeply resent changes in that routine. A flip through the program's recent mail suggests just how sensitive such viewers are to the slightest alterations in their matinal rhythms. Commenting on recent cast and format changes, they use words like "appalled," "horrified," "shocked" and "disgusted." Some of the changes underway threaten to rip the security blanket off millions of American beds.

"It's very scary when you start tampering with an American institution," says Paul Friedman, the 31-year-old Princeton graduate who is the show's new executive producer.

So why are they tampering with it?

The proximate cause, of course, is the much-publicized departure of Barbara Walters, who in October will join Harry Reasoner as co-anchorperson of ABC's Evening News. Miss Walters has been on "Today" for 14 years, rising to the status of co-host. Although she did not please everyone—some viewers regarded her as abrasive—she was unquestionably the program's most compelling personality and her loss left a gaping hole.

But several other factors had conspired to create a situation in which NBC officials felt they had to do more than simply replace La Barbara.

Chief among these were the show's ratings, which had begun to slip long before ABC's talent raid. From 1972 through mid-1975, "Today" had fairly consistently rated between 5 and 6, hitting a peak of 5.9 in early 1973. (Each rating point represents roughly one million viewers.) But in mid-1975, the ratings began to fall off, dropping to a low of 4.1 last May and—in part because of seasonal factors—to an average of 3.3 this summer. During the first week of July it hit 2.7, the lowest rating the show has received since 1967.

In large part, these declines reflect ABC's introduction of its revamped "Good Morning, America" show which has drawn almost twice as well as its inept predecessor, "A.M. America." Although "Today" retains an edge over its competitors on both ABC and CBS, that margin has been shaved severely. Moreover, this slippage has been achieved, in part, by a relative decline in the other mainstay of NBC's news operation—the "Nightly News"—with John Chancellor. Over the past year, the "Nightly News" has fallen substantially behind its chief competitor, Walter Cronkite's CBS News. In June, NBC took a drastic step to regain its competitive edge by reintroducing David Brinkley as co-anchorman with Chancellor.

"There was a sense of panic at the network this spring, a fear that we might end up not only number two but actually number three," says one NBC executive. "The ratings decline at both 'Today' and the 'Nightly News' worried us, and Barbara's departure led it. They were primed for some decisive steps and so, when the fan belt broke, they decided to replace the whole engine."

In this context, the first component the network decided to replace was Jim Hartz, the easygoing Oklahoma man who has been the male host on "Today" since Frank McGee's death in mid-1974. As the ratings declined over the previous year, Hartz's soft-spoken, laid-back style had increasingly drawn barbed criticism from NBC executives. Richard Wald, president of NBC News—who has ultimate authority in such matters—told Hartz repeatedly to "sit up," which Hartz knew referred to "more than my posture." Wald told others that Hartz needed "a shot of adrenalin."

But Hartz—one of the best liked and least affected performers in the business—felt he couldn't alter his natural style. "I only knew one way to be and if that wasn't good enough there wasn't anything I could do about it," he said in a recent interview. "There's enough artificiality in this medium without altering the way you are."

Network officials were particularly critical of Hartz's "lax, laid-back" interviewing style. "I guess we just have two different ideas about interviewing," he said. "I felt the secret was being a good listener. That always worked for me as a reporter. My goal was to elicit information, and I didn't think you got more stuff by hammering at people."

Finally, last May 24, Wald called Hartz into his office, told him they were going to replace him as host but feel for what people out there in the country are thinking—and we want to retain that. But Tom can give us that sense of getting inside the big story, the sort of stuff which reporters tell each other over drinks at the bar but which so rarely gets on the air. I think the public is ready for that."

There was one obstacle to Brokaw's selection: his refusal to read commercials. This may have been the chief reason he didn't get the job in 1974. For while Wald, an ex-newspaperman, raked at the notion of newsmen reading commercials, the sales staff argued that the performers' willingness to personally tout dog food and toothpaste was one of the show's major attractions to advertisers.

But now Wald and the sales executives struck a bargain:

if the major on-air performers—the male host, the new woman, Gene Shalit and the chief news reader—were exempted from reading commercials, the show would hire two new performers—a man and a woman—to do commercials as well as light features.

The compromise not only permitted Brokaw to take the job without bending his professional principles, but it also led to the next development in the complicated realignment.

The producers were unhappy with Lew Wood, the news reader with a tendency to fluff words and transpose phrases. Accordingly, it was decided to transfer from NBC's Chicago station WMAQ the veteran—and eminently professional—anchorman Floyd Kalber into "Today's" news slot and de-mote Wood to weather, sports and commercials.

Wood's hold on even this slot is tenuous. Weather has long been one of the show's most popular segments, and "Today" employs a full-time meteorologist to devise its marvelously intricate charts. To beef it up even further, NBC is negotiating with John Coleman, a skilled and imaginative Chicago weatherman, for the "Today" on-air job.

Similarly, the executives had not been happy with Doug Kiker's performance as "Today's" Washington editor; they had expected the able and experienced reporter to be a tougher and more aggressive interviewer. After the Republican convention, Kiker will return to full-time political reporting and "Today" will get a new Washington man—possibly Tom Pettit.

Meanwhile, the search goes on for the No. 1 woman. Wald emphasizes that whoever gets this job, she will not take Barbara Walters's slot as co-host. "We're going back to the old notion of having one host," he says. "Brokaw will be the central figure around whom everything revolves, including the new woman."

Originally, the network compiled a list of 36 women, including everyone who had ever been mentioned for the job (the list included such unlikely names as Julie Nixon Eisenhower, Sally Quinn, Doris Kearns and Elizabeth Drew). But from the beginning Wald wanted a woman with television news experience, preferably from NBC's own staff or affiliates, and during mid-summer "Today" began on-air auditions of four such women: Catherine Macinn, Linda Ellerbee, Betty Rollin and Jane Pauley. Also still in the running is Betty Furness, who has been filling in for Barbara Walters until the decision is made. NBC has been studying film of other candidates not with the network and may hold some in-studio auditions for them later. But, as of this writing, Jane Pauley—at the tender age of 25—has gathered the highest marks from network executives and appears to have a slim lead. Among her assets are a cool aplomb and an uncanny resemblance to Barbara Walters.

Meanwhile, other staff changes have taken place behind the scenes. Richard Hannah, the news division vice president who had supervised "Today," was replaced by Richard Fisher, and Stuart Shulberg, "Today's" producer, gave way to Paul Friedman. Everyone insists that neither change had anything to do with "Today's" ratings—hannah has personality conflicts with some colleagues, and Shulberg had produced "Today" for eight years and was eager to move on to other things—but the snafus have certainly affected the show.

Friedman, who has emerged as the bright-young-man-on-the-rise at NBC News, plans major changes in format as well as cast, but he recognizes the delicacy of the operation. "Of course," he says, "we have to keep enough of the old to reassure our traditional audience while changing enough to attract new viewers."

Friedman feels his prime task is to "make the show move faster." He has already begun to reduce the length of most segments and increase their number. In recent years, "Today" has been divided into four half-hours, each led off by news and weather. This leaves four chunks varying from 9½ to 13 minutes. "Too often," Friedman says, "we devote all of that to one long interview, which often dragged badly. I'm going to chop it into at least two segments and more often three."

Many of "Today's" interviews have traditionally been with authors peddling their new books. Friedman plans to do fewer books. "Books belong on the show when they're making news, when they're written by somebody important, or when they deal with ideas we just have to discuss. But we're not going to put on junk just because it's in a new book." Moreover, he wants to find new ways to discuss books—for example, by bringing out experts on to discuss the subject with the author.

Friedman is a strong believer in providing the viewer with information he really needs. Such information—particularly on health and consumerism—will be a major aspect of the new "Today." "We get tremendous listener response in these areas," Friedman says. "The most mail we've had on a subject since I've been here was on a piece about facial pain."

To handle such assignments, Friedman is drawing heavily on people who worked for him when he produced WNBC's News Center 4—Frank Field on health and medicine; Betty Furness on consumerism; Dick Shaap on sports and Stan and Floss Dworkin on gardening. This proliferation of on-air performers bothers some people at NBC who feel it threatens to destroy the show's "family feeling."

"That's dangerous," one network official warns. "The secret of 'Today' has been its consistency, its reliability. People knew what to expect. It was the house always to be found at 21 Maple Street, not a trailer here one day, the next day out on Route 50."

Victorian India In Focus

a for the beginner is an impossible subject. There's so much of the place. So much has happened there. So much is happening there now. Faced with a highly educated Indian, we marvel at the intelligence, the speed of wit, the clarity of human understanding, the steadfastness, and conceivably we feel that we are getting India. But then we reflect on the variations in looks, in landscape, in mores and in practical life that mark that vast country, and we decide not to go so far after all.

At the Asia House Gallery, 113 East 64th Street, not solve this problem for you, but it will give you a good time. It is a photographic exhibition of a look of India, the Indians and their British 355 and 1911. It gets in just before the "sooty" therefore, and it gets out at the time of George V to India. (Never before had a monarch visited India, and the festivities ow, it often happens with old photographs that the final image is in direct proportion to which it was achieved. And in the case of India, the difficulties were often very many. Men were needed to carry John Bourne's another 22 totes his "personal baggage," custine, hermetically-sealed stores, a good sey's brandy in lieu of Bass and Alltop's sites, books, camp furniture, etc." Months note places, with never a familiar tongue spoken or a communication of any kind from the world outside.

"Three ghastly British traders having a good time as they glare out at us"

We may be deceiving ourselves, but the images which resulted do seem to have an unviolated look. We are looking at people who were never photographed before and could give themselves only once in quite so total an innocence of what the whole operation was about. Whence the magic of this show, which has exactly 100 photographs to offer, with not a dull one among them.

Ideally, the visitor should have with him at the show a book which has been produced by Aperture and bears the same name—"The Last Empire"—and is on sale at the gallery for $12.50. Its illustrations sometimes overlap with the show and sometimes do not; in combination the two are irresistible. We shall not lightly forget the skinned-alive look of the fakirs, nor the weird antics of the mussock men as they prepare to cross the Beu River. (A mussock man walked around in an inflated buffalo skin several times larger than a man, thereby ensuring maximum buoyancy for himself, his passengers and any other load that could somehow be fitted onto him.)

Piece by piece, a way of life long vanished is put together in this show and its accompanying book. The look of a Victorian young lady, for instance, as she sought the shade of a gigantic banyan tree. The prodigious exertions of the little train which covered the 51 miles from Siliguri to Darjeeling and was lucky to do it in six hours even. The look of autocracy gone berserk in the face of the Maharajah of Rewah. And the gleam and glimmer of a 700-foot-long temple corridor, kept perfectly in focus with the help of Indians who held up reflector after reflector.

And then the British! What on earth can they have looked like to the Indians? At this distance of time we feel mostly pity for the pampered, overdressed, and palpably not very brainy young officers. Lucky were the ones who commanded those parsons of loyalty, the Sikhs; less so, those who were cut down by insurgents. But meanwhile, and in peaceful times, was there ever a more privileged life?

Even the three ghastly British traders are clearly having a very good time as they glare out at us, grudging the photographer the exposure-time which keeps them from the bottle on the table before them. (One of them has enough facial hair to upholster a family saloon.) As for the "Englishman Being Served Coffee in Bed" in 1870, he is an archetypal debauchee, with his clothes strewn all over the room, a half-finished tumbler of brandy on the floor within reach, and a devoted young servant wondering whether to risk a thrashing by rousing him five minutes too soon.

That life in India could be very funny is often forgotten. E. M. Forster's "A Passage to India" was the first great book to bring that out, and visitors to the show may like to get hold of Forster's later, slighter "Hill of Devi" (Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich, $2.65 paperback), which deals with his years as private secretary to the Maharajah of Dewas. The dates are different, of course. (Forster was in Dewas in 1912-13, and again in 1921.) But for the mercurial variations, the lizard-like darlings this way and that, which characterize Anglo-Indian relations in private, "The Hill of Devi" has a timeless validity.

The films of James Ivory are also invaluable, in this context. Tomorrow at 2 P.M. and on Thursday, Aug. 26 at the same time, visitors to the Asia House Gallery can see two small masterpieces by Mr. Ivory. One, "The Delhi Way," is about traditional life in Delhi. The other, "Autobiography of a Princess," is remarkable for the delicacy with which James Mason touches on the dilemmas of an Englishman who loved India, was treated better there than at any other time in his life, and yet . . . The rest the reader must see for himself.

So there it is. History comes in all sizes. Sometimes we think that India would tax Homer, tax Tolstoy, tax Gibbon, and tax Shakespeare himself to get it all down on the page. Sometimes we wonder if even Verdi, that great poet of political convulsion, would be equal to India. Sometimes we remember Rembrandt's huge historical paintings and wonder if he, too, would fall short. But then we see a show like this, or we read a book like "The Hill of Devi," and we know history can also be learned piece by little piece, and with unbounded profit.

"The Last Empire" at Asia House Gallery, 113 East 64th Street, through Aug. 29. Open 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. Monday through Friday; 11 A.M. to 5 P.M. Saturday; 1 to 5 P.M. Sunday.

TOGRAPHY VIEW

GENE THORNTON

time of photographic contrasts at The Museum of Modern Art. Or is it? Upstairs in the third floor photography gallery is a one-of-a-kind gallery by a young man, Nick Nixon. Downstairs in the special galleries is a selection of early 20th-century photographs of the building of the Panama Canal by Ernest "Red" Hallen. Ostensibly unrelated, and I shall begin by considering Nixon's photographs are snapshot-like pictures and some are views of leafy countryside.

However, most of his pictures are distant views of big cities in the bland, unemphatic style that is now de rigueur with a certain group of younger artist photographers. Nixon's cities are cities as seen from the upper floors of tall office buildings: still, cold, remote and unreal. The horizon line is usually high and there is usually no foreground; one is plunged immediately into the middle ground or background as from a great height. There is seldom any real center of interest in Nixon's pictures and even when there is, as in his "View of the Mother Church and Christian Science Complex, Boston, 1975," unrelated buildings seem to grow out of one another in a way that makes the ostensible subject hard to read.

The truth is that Nixon does not seem very interested in subject matter. I have the impression that he is far more interested in achieving the random overall effect of a Jackson Pollock painting, with little bits of exactly equal importance scattered uniformly over the picture surface. Of course, since he is a photographer, not a painter, the bits in his pictures are concrete and specific—this church, those buildings, that particular city—not abstract and generalized, as in a painting by Pollock. But the intention—and to a certain degree the final effect—is abstract.

The same cannot be said of Ernest Hallen's photographs of the construction and early days of the Panama Canal. Hallen was the official photographer of the Canal from 1907 to 1937, and he worked under specific instructions to record all significant aspects of the Canal's construction and operation. His pictures are full of things: men, machines, railroad tracks, gigantic trenches in the earth, ships, steam shovels and monumental masonry, and in so far as they can be said to be composed, they are composed to show off the appearance and significance of the things depicted.

The selection of Panama Canal photographs at the Museum, approximately 225 slides and prints from among the more than 12,000 that Hallen made, consists of two series showing the excavation of the Culebra Cut and the construction of the Gatun Locks. They are unpretentious record shots, but because of the subject matter some of them are really quite bizarre. Without looking at the labels, we might suppose they depict the archeological excavation of ancient masonry walls or the construction of a set for a colossal science fiction film. However, every photograph is clearly labeled and dated on the negative itself, so we are never in any real doubt about what we are seeing or about the photographer's intention to show it to us as clearly and truly as possible. There is also no doubt that he succeeds in this. When the photographs are shown in sequence, as they are at the Museum, we get a very good idea of the progress of the undertakings they depict.

Hallen is, in short, an early 20th-century photographic craftsman or artisan hired to record a certain specific subject matter and earning his living by doing just that, while Nixon is a late 20th-century photographic artist supported in part by foundation grants and free to follow his fancy wherever it leads. No two approaches to photography could reasonably be thought of as being further apart, and yet there are some striking resemblances between the two photographers' pictures. Although Nixon seems to be a formalist with no interest in his subject matter as such, his pictures have almost as documentary a look as those of Hallen, right down to the names and dates that serve as their titles. And though Hallen is no formalist, certainly not in the styles of his own time, his pictures have a certain formal resemblance to Nixon's. Like Nixon he frequently photographs from above, achieving as a result a high horizon line, and his pictures are filled with so many details that they often have a similarly random overall effect.

Could it be that these two different photographers really do have something in common? Was the official photographer of the Panama Canal an American Artger who was really preoccupied with form in a way that was ahead of his time, and is the young artist photographer from Boston really interested in recording his city's look just like any common commercial photographer? Or are we being seduced once again by one of MOMA's super-slick art historical packaging jobs? A little of both, I think, but more of the latter.

Nick Nixon certainly knows his photographic history, and he is clearly impressed by the work of documentary photographers long dead. He has earned his M.F.A. in photography from the University of New Mexico, and like so many university trained modern artists he is exploring the history of his medium for clues as to its future. (This used to be called academicism but now it is called modernism.) Hallen, on the other hand, is a true old-fashioned primitive who looks modern only because academic modernists like Nixon are trying to re-create his naive effects and turn them into pure art. It is all a kind of dizzy game with mirrors, but since it is being played at the Museum of Modern Art it is liable to wind up as real in the art history books.

"Longer Views" (photographs by Nick Nixon, through Oct. 5) and Panama Canal photographs by Ernest "Red" Hallen (through Oct. 3) at the Museum of Modern Art, 11 West 53d Street. Open 11 A.M. to 6 P.M. daily; until 9 P.M. Thursday; closed Sunday.

Staging Artists Designers the Theater

I design want to do would like speaker is stage de- self-known Alex Katz. auspices, ng number linters and ighting for qua, Long Island. The roster of artists is impressive. Besides Mr. Katz, it includes Jasper Johns, Robert Indiana, Robert Rauschenberg, Frank Stella, James Rosenquist, George Segal, Robert Motherwell, Saul Steinberg and Edward Avedesian.

The key to the program's success—and by and large, it has been a success—is that the artist is not forced on the producing company. No artist may apply for himself but must wait to be asked by the theatrical organization. The Endowment serves as a broker between producing groups and the artistic community.

One match which has worked out happily is Edward Avedesian and Charles Ludlam's "The Ridiculous Theatrical Company." Three seasons ago, the company asked Mr. Avedesian to design the poster along with costumes and sets for its successful production of "Hot Ice." Another successful pairing is the American Dance Festival and Mr. Katz, who was engaged by the Festival to do the poster as well as the costumes and sets for Paul Taylor's new dance, "Polaris." It will receive its premier performance this Thursday at Newport, R.I. A third team is Robert Indiana and the Opera Association of New Mexico, for which Mr. Indiana has designed the sets and costumes used in a new production of Virgil Thompson's opera, "The Mother of Us All," to be performed this month. The painter had known the composer since the mid-1960's, but they had not previously collaborated on a production. Mr. Indiana's sympathy for the composer's music and particularly the opera made him a logical choice for the production and contributed to the successful completion of the commission.

In Mr. Katz's case a similar sympathy existed. "I had worked with Paul [Taylor] before, though not in some time, and the commission got us back together again," Mr. Katz says. "Sometimes he has a lot finished before I design anything, and other times I present him with something that I would like to see him work with on stage. For the new piece, I gave him an openwork outline for a cube that's nine feet tall. It's also easy to transport since it comes apart in 12 light sections, which is important for a company that tours as much as his."

The program, established in 1973, allows a maximum of $1,500 for posters and $5,000 for sets and costumes, designated as the designer's fee, not as production money. Slides of the artist's work are requested so that the panel of four—balanced to represent both the artist's side and the producer's interests—can examine them to see that they meet agreed-on standards. Since the program's debut, it has dispensed a little over

Robert Indiana's design for the opera, "The Mother of Us All"

$200,000 to cover 74 grant requests, about two-thirds of them from regional companies. "We do everything we can to help local sponsors," says Mr. O'Doherty. "They must, of course, make their own choices as to who would be suitable for their particular needs, and we are willing to discuss this with them. If they cannot find someone satisfactory, we will even provide a consultant who will inform them of artists currently working and help them come up with someone appropriate." When Mr. Avedesian agreed to do "Hot Ice," he had never designed for the theater before, although he had known Charles Ludlam for some time. "I attended a lot of rehearsals, read the rudimentary script and listened to Charles talk about the mood of the play. When I understood it, it went off without a hitch. The costumes weren't really designed—it was more a question of dressing. We went out to look for suitable clothing and then decorated it. I finally reached a point where I felt that we had a good solution and wasn't interested in going on to something that didn't seem to be an improvement." Asked whether it wasn't a question of give and take, he responds, "Yeah, he gave and I took. But it was a fantastically rich experience. The book is terrific, and I loved doing the costume research at the Metropolitan Museum."

As with any collaboration, success depends on the persons involved and the level of their cooperation. "If a production goes sour," observes Mr. O'Doherty, "we give the local sponsor a second chance to find someone else. We know we are asking much of performing people, to work with artists lacking theater experience during the pressures of production schedules, but we felt that artists have something to offer and ought to be asked. We don't see the program as a replacement for professional stage designers but as a supplement to their work."

A knowledge of the theater would appear to be helpful but not essential, since even with someone as experienced as Mr. Katz there is no guarantee that the collaboration will mature satisfactorily. For example, when the Michigan Opera Theater requested the artist as a designer for a production of "Washington Square," things did not go at all well.

"The staging was difficult since there were a lot of scenes to handle, and I tried several things," Mr. Katz reports. "The costumes posed no problems, the director liked them. The problem came about the set. I had an idea about a revolving set which was rejected; then I tried a two-tier static set. But it didn't seem to fit. Then I proposed open-front cubes to suggest rooms, but it was felt that these were too solid, so I put doors in at back to lighten the look. When that wasn't found suitable I withdrew from the project."

"I think that you always have to look for the best, the most elegant solution to the problem," he adds. "The director's ideas were good ones, better than mine, but I finally reached a point where I felt that we had a good solution and wasn't interested in going on to something that didn't seem to be an improvement." Asked whether it wasn't a question of give and take, he responds, "Yeah, he gave and I took. But it was a fantastically rich experience. The book is terrific, and I loved doing the costume research at the Metropolitan Museum."

As with any collaboration, success depends on the persons involved and the level of their cooperation. "If a production goes sour," observes Mr. O'Doherty, "we give the local sponsor a second chance to find someone else. We know we are asking much of performing people, to work with artists lacking theater experience during the pressures of production schedules, but we felt that artists have something to offer and ought to be asked. We don't see the program as a replacement for professional stage designers but as a supplement to their work."

Although the powerful scenic artists' union casts a cold eye on non-union stage designers, it has so far challenged none of the "outside" artists because most of the work has been done with smaller, out-of-town companies. In the case of one major New York City company, the Joffrey Ballet, the union has been persuaded to waive its restrictions for one new production a season. Thus, two years ago James Rosenquist did the settings for Twyla Tharp's "Deuce Coupe?"

II," and for a new, as yet unnamed ballet that will make its debut next spring. Director Robert Joffrey will again supplement the work of regular stage designers with an outsider of merit. The operative phrase in the contract is "outstanding reputation," which happily meshes with the National Endowment's intentions.

Previously, the impetus for artists' participation in the theater has come from private individuals. Until his death in 1929, the emigre Russian impresario Serge Diaghilev involved the most advanced European painters of his day in the design of ballet sets and costumes, drawing on the talents of Bakst, Picasso, de Chirico, Derain, Laurencin, Goncharova, Larionov, Pevsner and Gabo among others. Martha Graham's triumphal collaboration with Noguchi over four decades is legendary, and during the 1930's and 1940's Lincoln Kirstein involved Tchelichev, Kurt Seligmann, Jared French and Paul Cadmus in ballet productions before abandoning the effort.

Since then the only major performing group to work with artists on a sustained basis has been the Merce Cunningham Dance Company, which has commissioned decors or costumes from David Hare, Robert Morris, Bruce Nauman, Andy Warhol, Mr. Stella, Mr. Rauschenberg, and Mr. Johns, among others. Otherwise the collaborations between fine artist and performing artists have been sporadic. Taking stock of the talented pool of painters and sculptors, the National Endowment has modestly, but firmly moved to reopen the possibilities.

The question of the game then became whether the white attack or the black defense would prevail on the kingside. Afterward, Matanovic thought that he should have tried to beat me to the punch by 23 ... The only defense available was 48 ... N-B3, but after 49 B-N8ch, N-xR; 50 B-xR, he had to give back the knight as well for the sake of covering mate at KN7. The whole combination netted me only a pawn after 52 ... BxQ, yet that meant the game, since 53 B-N4, BxB; 54 RxB resulted in a winning rookand pawn ending. The key move, 55 R-N1, to get the rook behind the QP, led to a quick finish. After my 60 P-Q7, Matanovic resigned because 60 ... R-xP; 61 R-xR, K-xR; 62 K-B4 wins the king-and-pawn ending.

NUMISMATICS

6-Day A.N.A. Show Opens Tuesday

organized a specialty group called Early American Copper; the group will gather at 7:30 P.M. Wednesday in the Regency Room.

Exonumia comes to the fore at 8 P.M. Wednesday with meetings of the Love Token Society in the Vendome Suite and the Metropolitan New York Chapter of the Token and Medal Society in the LaLoire Suite. This last-named event should be the "answer to a prayer" for many New York area hobbyists who have written to this column asking for guidance in getting started on the collecting of exonumia (tokens, medals and other non-coin items).

The Wooden Money Collectors will meet at 10 A.M. on Thursday in the Malmain Suite. And then, at 1 P.M., in the same room, one of the most active of the exonumia groups, the Civil War Token Society, will hold its annual meeting, round table and swap session. At 1:30 P.M. the Society of Paper Money Collectors will get together in the LaLoire Suite.

Collectors who would like to contribute articles (on personal experiences, numismatic research, etc.) to any of the various weekly and monthly hobby papers and magazines will find expert guidance, for free, at the Writers Symposium sponsored by the Numismatic Literary Guild at 4 P.M. on Thursday in the Regency Foyer. Only one example is needed to illustrate the kind of top-notch help that will be available: One of the symposium panel speakers will be Richard S. Yeoman of the Whitman Coin Products Division of the Western Publishing Company, Racine, Wis. Long a legendary figure in the hobby, he is perhaps most familiar to a generation of collectors as the creator (founding editor) of the Handbook of U.S. Coins (better known as the Red Book); the Guide Book of U.S. Coins (better known as the Blue Book); and the Catalog of Modern World Coins (better known as the Brown Book). These three books are the bedrock for any beginning collector's home library.

The "parent" national organization of exonumia collectors—the Token and Medal Society—will hold its annual general meeting at 10 A.M. on Friday in the Regency Ballroom. A meeting of the Judaic Synographic (another name for paper money) Collectors is scheduled for 11 A.M. Friday in the LaLoire Suite. Collectors specializing in commemorative elongated coins are due to meet at 3 P.M. Friday in the Regency Ballroom.

U.S. MINT BICENTENNIAL SOUVENIR SET, 1976

This specially packaged coin-medal set will be for sale at the U.S. Mint's educational exhibit at the American Numismatic Association convention in New York this week (see accompanying article for details).

An important event for anyone interested in coins, paper money and medals of the world is on the program for 2 P.M. Friday in the Regency Foyer. It is the annual symposium of the Organization of International Numismatists. This group has been in the forefront of national educational campaigns against rare, coin forgeries and counterfeits and has conducted seminars at major coin shows throughout the country. One of its founders and former presidents is Virgil Hancock of Bellare, Tex., who is the current president of the A.N.A.

The principal specialty event on Saturday's schedule is a 9 A.M. meeting of the International Bank Note Society in the Georgian Room. Saturday night, however, brings the major social "happening" of the convention, the annual A.N.A. Banquet. Information on availability of reservations can be obtained at the main registration desk. The annual general meeting of the A.N.A., which non-members are invited to observe, is the highlight of Sunday, the convention's closing day. The meeting will be at 10:30 A.M. in the Royal Ballroom. The bourse and exhibit areas close at 4 P.M.

Book Auction

Although the A.N.A. convention officially winds up on Sunday, there will be one more important numismatic attraction in New York the next day (Monday, Aug. 30). Swann Galleries, Inc., 104 East 25th Street, will hold an auction of "rare and important numismatic literature"—significant books, journals, monographs, manuals and famous auction sale catalogues from the libraries of leading numismatists of an earlier generation, such as Wayne Raymond, F. C. C. Boyd, T. James Clark and J. De Lagerberg. The sale catalogue ($4, including the list of prices realized) is ready now. The two-session auction (10:30 A.M. and 1:30 P.M.) has 344 lots representing every aspect and era of U.S. and world numismatics.

Mint's Souvenir

The U.S. Mint will, of course, have an exhibit at the convention, and one of its sure-to-be-popular features is a specially packaged souvenir coin and medal set (see accompanying illustration). It contains uncirculated (not proof) specimens of the 40 percent silver quarter, half dollar and dollar with the special Bicentennial reverse designs, and a specimen of the new Philadelphia Mint Bicentennial medal.

The bronze medal, 1 5/16 inches in diameter, carries a depiction of the main or "mother" mint in Philadelphia, topped by a rendition of the Liberty Bell and displaying the bell's Biblical inscription "Proclaim Liberty Throughout All the Land." The reverse design is a reproduction of John Dunsmore's painting in which George Washington and other early American luminaries are shown "inspecting the First Coinage."

The medal made its debut as a feature of the Mint's exhibit at the Bicentennial Exposition on Science and Technology in the Kennedy Space Center near Cocoa Beach, Fla. As reported in this column July 11, under the heading "Fun at the Space Center," visitors were able to buy blank medal planchets for $1 and then strike their own souvenir medals on a special automated press. Until now, that was the only way this medal could be obtained.

The Mint's four-piece A.N.A. convention souvenir coin-medal set is priced at $10. The three 40 percent silver coins in it are, of course, the same as those still available from the Mint at $9 per set (without the medal). The special packaging for the souvenir set is imprinted with the names of Secretary of the Treasury William E. Simon and director of the Mint Mary Brooks.

The Mint exhibit will also offer an audio-visual slide show of the San Francisco Assay Office, where all U.S. proof coins are struck. This major Mint facility is not open to the public; thus, the narrated color slide show offers collectors their only opportunity to see the exacting procedures of proof-coin production.

The Bureau of Engraving and Printing will also have a convention exhibit and souvenir; it was reported and illustrated in last Sunday's column.

Medal Sidelights

Two special displays of medallion sculpture will be going on in midtown Manhattan during A.N.A. convention week. Both are free.

The Monnaie de Paris (Paris Mint), the official French Mint, will exhibit more than 100 specimens of its production of coins, medals and numismatic sculptures, many of them commemorating the U.S. Bicentennial, at the French Cultural Center, 972 Fifth Avenue at 79th Street. The show will be open from 9:30 A.M. to 5 P.M., Mondays through Fridays, starting tomorrow and continuing through Sept. 1.

The Medallion Art Company of Danbury, Conn., will display examples of the sculptural works of artists whose designs have appeared on U.S. coins. The show, entitled "A Century of American Sculpture," will be held in the Equitable Life Assurance Society's Gallery at Sixth Avenue and 52d Street. It will open on Tuesday and continue through Sept. 17; the hours are 9 A.M. to 5 P.M., Mondays through Fridays.

The show should have special significance for coin collectors; they will be able to directly see, rather than merely visualize, the relationship between the bas relief created by an artist for a coin and that same artist's working models for the coin and other more massive sculptural works. One highlight of the show is a section covering the "golden era of U.S. coinage"—the period from 1907 to 1916—in which nine new coin designs were introduced. Five notable sculptors are represented: Augustus Saint-Gaudens, Victor D. Brenner, James Earle Fraser, Adolph A. Weinman and Hermon A. MacNeil. (The collector who can rattle off, unaided, the coins designed by this quintet of sculptors is at least several notches above average!)

By BERNARD GLADSTONE

Although most homeowners these days are doing more and more of their own routine maintenance around the house, there comes a time when a contractor or professional repairman must be hired for major projects such as putting on a new roof, installing siding, doing a complete exterior paint job, modernizing a kitchen, or adding an extension to the house. In far too many cases costs climb much higher than expected and the project leads to unpleasant, drawn-out arguments or, worse yet, to unnecessary law suits.

To avoid unhappy experiences of this kind there are several precautions the homeowner can take in choosing a contractor, and in signing contracts or making agreements with the one finally selected. Obviously the first step is trying to select a contractor who is reputable, honest, and reasonably competent.

Since most homeowners do not have occasion to deal with contractors on a day-to-day basis, they are often at a loss to know how to find one that they can have confidence in. As a rule, the best way is through personal recommendations from friends or relatives, and those whose opinions and values one respects (not everyone is equally fussy about the quality of work they expect, or about the amount of money they are willing to spend on a specific improvement).

If one cannot get recommendations from personal acquaintances, it often helps to ask local suppliers—for example, ask paint stores to recommend a good painter, ask lumber yards to recommend carpenters, electrical supply houses to recommend an electrician, etc. If possible, talk to more than one dealer or supplier, just to get more than one opinion. Also, if more than one supplier recommends the same contractor, one has further proof of that man's local reputation.

If there is a branch of the Better Business Bureau or the Chamber of Commerce in town, then it is also a good idea to check with them. They do not recommend firms, and they may have no information on a specific contractor, but if there have been many complaints about one, they may have a record of this.

Other sources of information about local contractors are banks and allied businesses who may have had dealings with the firm. When checking with suppliers, try to find out if the contractor has good credit references—if a supplier infers that this company or man buys only for cash, then caution is advised (all reputable contractors have open charge accounts). If a contractor offers to supply the names of previously satisfied customers in the community, by all means check with these people, but caution is advised to make certain these names are not merely those of friends or relatives of the contractor.

After one or more contractors have been selected, it is important to ask for a written estimate from each. Price comparison is valuable and important, but it need not be the only criterion because the lowest price will not always give as good a job as one of the higher ones. It is essential at this stage that everything be done in writing. The estimate should state clearly what work will be done and what materials instrument, the more valuable it is, generally.

"The aim in making these instruments was convenience in handling," says Mr. Pfeifer. "Nobility took their telescopes and especially their barometers with them so they could know what the weather would be like; the doctor carried his pill box and surgical tools in a portable case; the pharmacist took his microscopes so he could look at the bugs. The smaller you made an instrument, the easier it was to handle and to use. But reducing the size made it more difficult to make accurate. The greatest instrument makers are those who could produce miniature devices."

International Business Machines has assembled a fine collection of both antique measuring and calculating instruments. The IBM collection, partly on view in New York at 57th Street and Madison Avenue and partly on loan to institutions around the country, includes models of Leonardo da Vinci's designs for a hygrometer (for measuring humidity), an anemometer (for measuring wind velocity), and an inclinometer (for determining the degree of a slope.)

will be used so that estimates can be compared fairly. If brands or sizes are involved, make certain that each estimate specifies these, and that all are figuring on the same ones.

Where fixtures, appliances or other equipment will be added, the estimate (and eventually the written contract) should clearly state who will supply and pay for each item, what sizes or colors are involved, and what brands will be furnished. On paint jobs the number of coats to be applied should be spelled out, and the preparation (before painting) stipulated—for example, scraping, sanding, removing, etc.

On alteration jobs where trash removal will be required, the question of who will remove the trash and possibly supply needed covers for furniture or floors should be clearly spelled out beforehand. If timing is important, a starting date and a completion date should be specified ahead of time.

The question of how and when payments should be made is frequently another source of argument, so this too should be put down in writing before the contract is signed. Payment in advance is generally not required unless the contractor must order expensive appliances, fixtures, or custom-made cabinets, and even then an advance deposit should not be more than the wholesale value of these items.

Payment as work progresses is fairly normal on large jobs which will take weeks, but not on those which can be completed in a week or two. However, the payment schedule should be such that at no time has the homeowner given the contractor more money than the amount of work done. Also, at the completion of the job the homeowner should still owe the contractor some money.

On alteration jobs where several different trades will be called in, the question of who will pay each one should be clearly spelled out—general contractors normally stipulate their own subcontractors (electricians, painters, etc.), but some figure on only the major installation and assume the homeowner will call in his own electrician to do the wiring, or his own painter to do the finishing.

Of all the misunderstandings that can cause arguments and aggravation on a major remodeling or improvement job, probably the most frequent is the addition of "extras" after the job is under way. The customer decides to change something, add something, or replace something that was not included in the original contract or estimate—so the contractor does this upon the verbal request of the owner. Either cost is not discussed at all, or the contractor agrees to make the change on the basis of what it will cost him for labor and materials, plus a reasonable profit. When the final bill is submitted, these "extras" may be much higher than the

To eliminate the need for working with roofing cement and similar messy mastic materials when fixing holes and leaks around roofs, in gutters, along chimneys, and in dozens of other places, do-it-yourselfers can now buy two types of self-adhesive asphalt/rubber tape which will stick to almost any surface, as long as it is reasonably clean and dry. Once pressed into place, this black, rubber-like tape will stick permanently to seal out water, dirt and air.

The first of these products is called Flashband, and it comes with an aluminum facing on one side. In addition to being suitable for use around gutters and roofs as mentioned above, it can also be used to seal leaks around air conditioners and skylights, to fix holes in downspouts, hoses and drain pipes, and to replace caulking around pipes where they go through exterior walls. The tape is also excellent for patching rusty spots in garden carts or automobile bodies, as well as for use instead of tree wound paint on branches. Flashband is made by Evode, Inc., 401 Kennedy Boulevard, Somerdale, N.J. 08083, and a 24-inch long strip, 3 inches wide, sells for $1.95.

A similar product, called Duro Seal Patch, is made by Woodhill Chemical Sales Corporation, 18731 Cranwood Parkway, Cleveland, Ohio 44128, except that this one does not have the aluminum facing—it is black on both sides (with one side having the adhesive backing). Seal Patch comes in a 6-inch wide, 36-inch $3.95. Bo weat last! will! harde form as it!

which may be just what the collector is seeking.

The price for entry into collecting scientific instruments ranges from zero to $5,000. Old laboratory and obsolete computer equipment is often junked. Old surveying calipers can be bought for $25 to $30; old directional compasses from $10 to $50; small microscopes circa 1890, $40 to $50.

In the upper mid-range are such items as the six-inch Newtonian telescope which goes for $200. On the upper end of the spectrum are items such as the Unitron equatorial mounting for reflecting telescopes that follow stars which costs $5,000.

As in other fields, fakery has become somewhat of a problem. "I won't see an ancient sundial offered for sale for quite a long time. Then I suddenly see 30 and I'll know someone has been busy forging ancient sundials," says Philip W. Pfeifer, whose shop at 900 Madison Avenue in New York has some superb instruments.

Before buying expensive pieces, one should try to authenticate it with museum curators and other specialists. Members of the Amateur Astronomers Association, 212 West 79th Street, New York N.Y. 10024, are often willing to authenticate specimens in their specialty. One fairly reputable source for instruments are advertisements in specialized journals, among them Sky & Telescope, 49 Bay Street, Cambridge, Mass. 02138 ($10 a year); Astronomy, 254 North Broadway, Milwaukee, Wis. ($10 a year); and Scientific American, 415 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10017 ($15 a year).

Ideally, after being collected, the antique instruments should be put to occasional use. The pieces can be taken to lectures to demonstrate scientific advances or principles of physics or mechanics. "I am especially interested that the general reader acquire a good understanding of the historic and scientific value of old instruments," says Allen L. King, professor emeritus of physics at Dartmouth College. "Such instruments should not be simply art objects or conversation pieces and never should be distorted or mutilated to render them more 'interesting.' Every effort should be made to discourage this type of collecting!"

One large category of older scientific instruments is optical devices. A millennium ago the naked eye was limited in explaining to man the universe around him. Then the earliest telescopes of the 16th century expanded his vision a hundredfold and gave him new conceptions of his being. But the earlier instruments, if not as efficient, occupy a special niche in history. An outstanding piece in the earlier group is the brass refracting telescope made by Sir Isaac Newton around 1671 and owned by the British Royal Society.

One of the superb specimens in the shop of Philip W. Pfeifer is a telescope made by James Watson in 1810. The instrument, a reflecting telescope, is both a table model and a standing floor model.

With a 30 1/2 inch tube, and a 3 1/2 inch diameter, it has two eye pieces of 90 power and is valued at $10,900. Its authenticity is verified by two signatures, one on the mirror and another on the tube.

On the other end of the optical spectrum are microscopes which opened up the inner world of bacteria and viruses, molecules and atoms. They made their appearance in the 17th century.

H. B. Cantor, by profession owner of a hotel chain and by avocation a member of New York's Microscopical Society which meets at the Hayden Planetarium, 79th Street and Central Park West, describes his interest in microscopes: "I keep my microscopes in my den and each one has its own individuality. I have a big Zeiss with very fine lenses. As good as it is, I often use a little Dutch instrument. There are certain things I can see better in the small one."

"I often work all day and then I am up half the night looking into my microscopes, studying diatoms which are found in green algae. Every time you scoop up algae you find a different kind of animal... some listed in catalogs and some not."

Other optical instruments favored by collectors include spectacles, lenses, burning and magnifying glasses, binoculars, polarimeters (to measure polarized light) and goniometers (to measure refracting surfaces of crystals).

Into another category are measuring devices, starting with the simple ruler through such esoterica as pantographs, theodolites, pedometers, waywysers, clinometers and vernier scales. Among other older scientific memorabilia that are collectible are: hydrometric spirit measures to determine whether a liquid is rum, wine, whiskey or other alcoholic beverage; celestial spheres or globes representing the stars as seen from the outside, pivoted to represent the daily rotation of the stars; orreries which were presentations of the sun and the planets on the same plane showing relative motions; perpetual calendars, celestial charts, and of course, all types of scientific treatises. In collecting scientific memorabilia, the size of the instruments is often of importance—the smaller the in-late mother. "I attribute much of the way I am as a human being to her. While other kids were out on the streets, I was active in Girl Scouts and in school, and I had to do housework and be in at a certain time. And I got my singing talents from her. She had a beautiful voice, and we always sang around the house together."

From the time Miss Donaldson entered St. Aloysius Elementary School, it was her goal to become a nun. After graduation from Morris High School, she applied for admission to a convent, but was urged to remain "in the world" for a year, to make certain.

During that year, she auditioned for a spot with the tough Harry Belafonte company, and got it, along with "the big" for show business. Soon she was signed to stand by for Leslie Uggams for the Broadway run of "Hallelujah, Baby!" and eventually played that starring role on Broadway as well as on tour.

In what she regards as her biggest triumph before "Guys and Dolls," Miss Donaldson was picked for the part of Clara in the Arena Stage production of "The Great White Hope" in Washington, D. C. An out-of-town commitment kept her from moving to Broadway with the show, but she later returned to the role on Broadway as a replacement, with Yaphet Kotto in the starring role.

"I would have done it on Broadway with Jimmy [James Earl Jones]," she said, "but it was a matter of them waiting a week for me, and they didn't wait, and it broke my heart, and it told me a vest before summer or, the preferred time, in September for an extended harvest through fall, winter and early spring. In suburban Boston I sow corn salad by mid-September. Farther south, the date can be a week or so later.

Corn salad grows fast, but for winter use, it should reach good—not necessarily full—size before frosts slow down or halt growth. I planted corn salad once after October 1; the seedlings were tiny until late winter, then started growing again. They weren't wasted but the harvest period was particularly short.

The seed of corn salad is large enough to handle and distribute evenly. It is often broadcast. Under snow or mulch, plants seem easier to locate in a bed than in a long thin line. (Ditto for winter carrots and parsnips.) I shall pull up two spent cocozelle summer squash (two younger plants will continue to bear until frost) and sow corn salad in the area, roughly eight by ten feet.

In hot dry weather—possibly in September—protect the sowing with a light loose mulch (hay or grass clipplings), and water daily through the mulch until the seedlings emerge. Thin and use crowded seedlings; full-size plants should be six to eight inches apart.

If mulched in late fall with hay, or with leaves mixed with light brush so they won't blow, most plants survive winter and are usable in winter more often than not. Naturally, I don't dig for salad under a two-foot drift in zero weather. But if frozen, corn salad usually thaws out well; lettuce rots.

Corn salad is most appreciated in late winter and early spring. By mid-April, when lettuce or spinach is just being planted, corn salad becomes bitter and goes to seed. I usually let one or two plants mature, then save the seed to sow the next fall.

Corn salad has its own taste, but is less crisp than most lettuce. In France, they call mache sometimes by the familiar diminutive "doucelette"—tender and mild.

Corn salad makes the most "refined" potherb, compared to the coarseness of boiled kale, collards, or mustard greens. The ribbed leaves of some varieties cook up less soft and are a bit mushy. If corn salad seems too bland, add vinegar or lemon juice or the sour leaves of sorrel or the sharp-tasting arugula (also known as rocket or rocket).

There are two other greens to grow for winter salad. Peppercress, curly cress, garden cress are similar and taste much like watercress but are far easier to grow. All are quick crops—sometimes less than two weeks from seed to harvest. They're not hardy but can be grown inside in winter in flats or pots.

My favorite to go with corn salad is watercress or yellow rocket, Barbarea vulgaris. I have picked watercress almost every month of the year, but its true season is the same as corn salad's— from late fall (St. Barbara's day, Dec. 4).

It continues through winter and into early spring until the yellow flowers bloom in late April or May and the foliage then turns bitter. (The unopened flower clusters are sometimes cooked like broccoli.)

Watercress has always grown free for me on the edge of a fallow field and I willingly let it self-sow here and there about the yard. Look for it in rather moist rich sites. It can be found occasionally in city waste places.

Whether wild plant or weed, watercress looks like a cultivated vegetable: bright-green, shiny rosettes, though not so lush as corn salad. It can be sown and grown as a crop.

CURLY CRESS

CORN SALAD

When the Family Moves, The Garden Can, Too

The biggest problem was weight and volume. Moving companies will not transport shrubs or plants in trucks, so I had to carry our "untracked garden" in a car with piles of family belongings. Everything had to fit into limited space. Packing plants in damp peat moss in sealed plastic bags was the answer, light and compact.

Among cherished bushes I wanted to take (but couldn't dig up) were great stands of red climbing roses about 75 years old. With heavily scented blooms the size of saucers, the prolific and hardy roses were worth propagating. I resorted to a down-to-earth technique. "Whenever I want another rose," said my Aunt Rebecca Howard, "I take a cutting, stick it in the ground, and put a Mason jar over it." I followed her advice, adding another step to the process—dipping the cuttings into a rooting hormone before planting them. By September, about 20 baby rosebushes were rooted and flourishing from 8-inch cuttings taken in June. In October, I lifted them and put them in clay pots in south windows. They remained in the pots until Memorial Day, when they were transplanted in the garden.

The rosebushes have grown at a healthy pace, their blooms as spectacular as ever. Suspecting that the root structure of these young bushes may be insufficient to survive the winter, I've begun to root more slips under glass jars to take indoors again this winter; parent plants will remain in the ground, mulched and burlapped.

Uncertain about what to do with pussywillows, forsythia, lilacs and several other tree-size old bushes we enjoyed, I again tried Aunt Rebecca's rose propagating method. The slips rooted successfully under glass jars, spent the winter in sunny windows, and have continued to develop in the yard.

I'd also been hybridizing irises. The seedlings hadn't produced blooms in Montclair, I was reluctant to leave them behind. None of the iris experts I consulted could tell me what to do with the seedlings. Apparently hybridizers never move! "Iris do best if they're allowed to remain in the ground all winter," was one unhelpful caution.

Whereupon, I grit my teeth, lifted the iris seedlings, shook off the soil, and packed them between newspaper layers in a carton. Several weeks passed before the bedraggled

(but still green) little irises could be planted in flats in the cellar.

They turned brown during the winter. I presumed that they were dead, but I didn't have the heart to discard them after waiting more than a year to determine if I had any acceptable hybrids. Good fortune prevailed. Reset outdoors in May, the seedlings soon produced fresh green shoots. Several bloomed in June.

I also was in a quandary about what to do with some small rhododendrons, mountain laurel, andromeda, and a two-foot dogwood in a secluded cutting patch. After they were lifted with plenty of soil (doused with water to assure that the earth would not crumble from around the roots), they thrived in large plastic, moisture-retentive pots. (The dogwood shortly dropped every leaf, but it began to put out new leaves about two months later.) To help them along as soon as they went in the ground again, I mulched them heavily with peat moss and have continued to drench them with water daily, leaves and all.

Taking pachysandra may sound picaresque; it's inexpensive and easy to obtain. But the groundcover isn't readily available during the winter, and florists tend to gape if you say you want it for flower arrangements. Pachysandra is clean, too; it doesn't cloud water in clear glass vases, and the threadlike white roots are interesting.

We keep geraniums, poinsettias, impatiens, wax begonias, and coleus in clay pots all year round. I rooted cuttings in water. They weren't repotted until it was time to set them outdoors. Although a few were lost, the saved ones have done handsomely. Moving our plantings was easy, and I avoided considerable costs in developing our new garden. As we tended the several so-called "outdoor" flowers, bushes and trees, we also developed fresh perspectives on plants that may be used indoors during the winter.

The simple clue to success in moving a garden: Treat the plants as house plants until it's time for them to go outdoors again.

AROUND THE Garden

JOAN LEE FAUST

This Week:

Don't forget to use fertilizer for container grown plants after all the recent rainfall. . . . Feed late-sown crops, too; use a high nitrogen formula for leafy ones. . . . Time to think about ordering hardy bulbs for fall planting. . . . Keep up with those ripening tomatoes.

New Paperbacks

Some perky paperbacks are about these days. Here are a few of them. "Water, Light and Love" by Dee and Gene Milstein ($3.95) is delightful as "a guide to growing plants from seed." Published by the relatively new Applewood Seed Company, Lakewood, Colo. It tells in very simple detail just how to go about starting seeds to grow successfully indoors, mainly. Particularly bright are the illustrations inspired by Bertel Bager's seed photography. Don't miss the excellent charts in the back with specifics on hard-to-start seeds.

Do-it-yourselfers are about the only ones who build stone walls these days. They have a helpful mentor in John Vivian's "Building Stone Walls" (Garden Way, $2.95). The pictures and drawings are clear and helpful.

Though read with a somewhat skeptical eye, Duane Newcomb's "The Apartment Farmer" (J. P. Tarcher, $4.95), promises all sorts of superb harvests for the apartment gardener: 30 onions in an 8-inch pot; 16-20 beets or carrots in the same size pot and 10 to 20 bunches of snap beans in a 12-inch pot. He tells how to grow them successfully! Try it, it might work!

"The Lazy Indoor Gardener" by Roberta Pilner (Random House, $3.95) has good line drawings to identify the easy-to-grow plants. There are clues on how to keep indoor greenery thriving with the least effort. Those who want to try a little harder will find hints for more challenging plants as well as strategies for making the collection look bigger.

In the same vein Robert S. Hebb has put together "Low Maintenance Perennials" ($4.95 Quadrangle). Don't let his botanical names throw you. They are needed to pin down some fine perennials selected by Mr. Hebb, former assistant horticulturist at the Arnold Arboretum. The guide was originally printed by the arboretum's magazine, Arnoldia.

Here are some small "picture" books printed in the Netherlands and Great Britain in full color to teach and inspire, all from Collier Books. "Popular Exotic Cacti in Color" by Edgar and Brian Lamb ($6.95); "128 Garden Plants You Can Grow" by Rob Herwig and "128 Bulbs You Can Grow" by Rob Herwig, each $1.95. And finally, there is a delightful put-it-in-your-pocket guide to "Wild Flowers of the Northeast" by Katherine Mackenzie ($2.95, Scribner's).

'Coons and Corn

If the raccoons are getting to the corn first, the New York State Department of Environmental Conservation suggests electrically charged fencing. The fence can be made with a light wire and an inexpensive charger. Two wires, are strung, one four inches above the ground and another, four inches above it. Vegetation can short out an electric fence when operating so the lines should be kept clear and free.

If fencing is impossible at this stage of the gardening procedure, then some of the animal repellent sprays sold in aerosols can be squirted near the husks of the ears. Or one enterprising Connecticut gardener distributed along the corn rows, the feces from his German shepherd dog. That kept the furry night robbers away.

Answers/Questions

PAPAYA PLANT (Aug. 8)
A.C.G.M., Manhattan, asked how to grow plants from papaya seeds. John B. Freeman, a North Carolina reader has been growing papaya from seed successfully. He writes, "The seeds taken from the fruit are enclosed in clear gel-like sacs. I remove the seed from the sacs by squeezing each seed between thumb and forefinger. Plant seed one-half inch deep in loamy soil. Give the plants a sunny location, moist soil and air. They are handsome and grow fast." Paul E. Davis, a New York State reader also grows the papaya successfully. He dries the seed first and plants them in terrarium soil. He also agrees they grow rapidly. His first plant, now 2½ years old, is three and one-half feet high in a 12-inch pot.

SPRAY AND RAIN (Aug. 8)
R.J.S., Staten Island, N. Y. finds that it rains every time he sprays his apple trees. He asked if he should spray all over again. Not necessarily. If the spray is a fungicide, the coating on the leaves before a rain is all to the good. Insecticides do not stick well in rain, and should be reapplied. Ed.

HOLLYHOCK TROUBLE (Aug. 8)
Mrs. D.W.E., Damariscotta, Maine, is growing old-fashioned hollyhocks but they soon develop spotted leaves which yellow and die in spite of being sprayed with benomyl. She asked for a clue. Mrs. C. E. Jones, a New Jersey reader, explains, "The older varieties of hollyhock are not rust resistant. Some of the newer varieties are supposed to be. The only solution that seems to work is digging up the mature plants and relocating them in another spot in the yard."

WHITE WORMS (Aug. 8)
Mrs. J.B.B. Jr., Greenwich, Conn., is puzzled by white worms, less than a quarter-inch, that appear in Swiss chard, beet greens and sorrel after cooking. W. F. Westerfeld, a Pennsylvania reader, explains, "The white worms are the larvae of leaf miners which feed on the inner leaf tissue, leaving the upper and lower epidermal layers intact. The tunnels of the mature insects can be detected by inspecting the leaves for the meandering silvery lines made by their feeding."

HERBS IN POTS
Q: I have herbs planted in several pots outside and will bring them indoors in a few weeks. But they have insects on them. Is there a safe spray to get rid of the pests so that I may use the herbs? J.N.L. Altoona, Pa.

DOGWOOD BERRIES
I have a very lovely dogwood tree which has many red berries on it. Children come into my backyard and I am concerned that the attractive red berries might be tempting for tasting. Can anyone tell me if they are poisonous? E.M., Richmond Hill, N. Y.

(50 for $2.98)
(100 for $4.98)

(Reg. 10 for $1.00) For shady areas beneath shrubs and trees, even where grass won't grow, you can have a 12-month carpet of thick, abundant evergreen Periwinkle (Vinca minor). In May, beautiful lavender-blue flowers turn dull, hard-to-cover spots like steep banks and rock gardens into a showcase of green and blue healthy, nicely rooted plants. 10 for 20 sq. ft. 25 for 50 sq. ft., etc.

No other tree in the world like the Lily-Of-The-Valley Tree

(3 for $3.49) (6 for $6.49)

(Reg. $1.50) Every July, this tree changes almost overnight from a pretty green shade tree into a white cloud of thousands of flowers like Lilies-of-the-Valley. The second miracle happens in the fall with the first frost, which causes the whole tree to turn to a flaming red. One of the most beautiful and unusual of all trees (Oxydendrum arboreum). Grows to 30". You get 2-4 ft. collected trees.

Beautiful Shade Tree

Royal RED MAPLE

$1.50 ea.
(3 for $3.00) (6 for $5.00)

You'll enjoy the brilliant beauty of the Royal Red Maple (Acer rubrum). The rich green leaves of spring are complemented by dainty red flowers followed by red seeds. In fall, leaves turn to brilliant scarlet. Red Maple grows rapidly, maintaining a pleasing rounded shape. You get strong, heavily rooted, collected 2 to 4 ft. trees. Take advantage of this low price.

Grows in Winter!

SPREADING EVERGREEN

$2.00 ea.
(3 for $4.00)
(6 for $7.00)
(12 for $13.00)

Rugged Spreading Evergreen (Juniperus horizontalis procumbens) spreads easily to cover bare areas, steep banks and other tough-to-cover areas. One plant covers 4 to 6 ft. of ugly bare space. Spreading Evergreen grows all year long—even in winter. It's drought-resistant. Never gets more than 5 to 10 in. tall. You receive hardy plants in 2 1/2 in. pots.

Very Special!

RED TWIG DOGWOOD HEDGE

$2.98 for 100 ft.
(16 shrubs for $28 & $3.75)

These hardy Red Twig Dogwood (Cornus stolonifera) have beautiful clusters of white flowers in the spring, loads of lush green leaves in the summer, and in the winter, when you expect a drab yard, they put on a fiery show of color with their bright red stems contrasting against the snow! Nice 1 to 2 ft., well-rooted, nursery grown shrubs. Grow to 6 feet, but can be trimmed to a beautiful hedge.

Scarlet POPPIES

6 for $1.98
(12 for $3.75)
(18 for $5.00)

Plant these giant flowering Oriental Poppies now for a blaze of color in your garden next spring. Blooms often measure six inches across! Produce sturdy 3 ft. stems that easily support these giant blooms. You receive strong, heavily rooted, 2-year-old blooming size, northern grown plants.

Ford's General for the Economic Front

By ANN CRITTENDEN

WASHINGTON — Now that Gerald R. Ford has won his party's nomination, the battle for the Presidency has finally been joined. The major battlefield seems destined to be the economy and specifically the record of Alan Greenspan, the Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers. As the lines are drawn, three possible ways of looking at the matter emerge.

Was Mr. Greenspan the architect of a successful recovery from the worst recession in postwar history?

Or did that recovery occur, as the chief economist for one major corporation suspects, "despite Greenspan's recommendations rather than because of them?"

Or, as a number of observers are beginning to fear, is the recovery so fragile that we may be on the brink of still another downturn?

The man at the center of this dispute never set out to stir up controversy. When Richard Nixon asked Mr. Greenspan to come to Washington in the summer of 1974, the New York consultant approached the prospect as cautiously as he later managed the economy.

"I didn't sell my apartment at United Nations Plaza, I arranged a one-month cancellation clause in my lease here in Washington, and I put my stock in my consulting firm in a blind trust," he recalled in a recent interview in his spacious office in the old Executive Office Building, next to the White House.

The Go-Slow Tactics Of Alan Greenspan Come Under Dispute

"I never wanted to be in a position where I couldn't resign. My biggest surprise in this job has been that I didn't have to."

The affable, 50-year-old economist gives the credit for his unexpected fondness for the official life to Gerald Ford, who had moved into the Oval Office by the time Mr. Greenspan was sworn in, in September 1974. By all accounts the two men hit it off from the start. Both share a profoundly conservative approach to government, and Mr. Greenspan, Washington observers say, provides a philosophical foundation for Mr. Ford's inherently cautious instincts.

This chemistry, plus Mr. Greenspan's widely respected technical skills, enabled him to become one of President Ford's three or four closest advisers. Associates believe it is because he has carried a business consultant's one-to-one style of dealing with a client into his relationship with this business-minded President.

"I think he's had more influence on the President than any other C.E.A. chairman," says one of Mr. Greenspan's former Washington colleagues. He adds that the adviser spends so much time with the President that his staff has been known to grumble that he neglects them in the formation of important policies.

Such a degree of influence, for a man on the far right of the economic spectrum, is not without paradox.

A liberal economist, referring to Mr. Greenspan's classic free-enterprise views, once called him "one of the finest 18th century minds." Yet in a sense he may be a man whose time has come. The ideas of a reduced role of government, of the notion that there are no easy answers to our problems, and that the economy can only be set right by hard sacrifices, now have broad appeal to people who "are tired," as Mr. Greenspan puts it, "of Washington rhetoric" and apprehensive about the consequences of precipitous change.

In the hot debate over Mr. Greenspan's policies, the basic argument is whether the Administration has provided enough stimulus to boost the economy out of this particularly deep recession. Mr. Greenspan explains that his gradual, go-slow approach was based on the analysis that "inflation was the main cause of instability. Remove that cause and a recovery would ensue."

The fundamental reasoning was that when prices rose suddenly in 1973-74, consumers became worried about their future capacity to pay their bills, and retrenched. The result was a fall-off in retail sales, followed by a drop in business spending on inventories, and a recession.

So inflation, rather than the slowdown directly, was the disease that the Administration set out to YORK STATE? Is it best to deal directly with Atlanta, with such Carter aides as Jack H. Watson Jr., coordinator of policy planning, or Cooki Lutkededer, coordinator of the "51.3 percent Committee" (a group searching for qualified woman)?

What about talking to a friend, who in turn will talk to a friend, who will whisper that you are available into the ear of a columnist who can be trusted to repeat it in print?

Should they form a committee to support Mr. Carter, or make a campaign contribution, even if the individual limit is $1,000, or offer a policy paper to help shape his thinking on some key issue?

In fact, each of these methods is being employed, often in combination, as hundreds of businessmen and financiers scramble discreetly for position in anticipation of a Carter victory.

Who are the names being mentioned these days? And what are they doing? W. Michael Blumenthal, chairman of the Bendix Corporation, is one. Although Mr. Blumenthal tells associates that he is not interested in moving to Washington, he contributed the maximum $1,000 to the Carter campaign and attended a select luncheon given last month by a group of businessmen in honor of Mr. Carter at the "21" Club.

Furthermore, one of Mr. Blumenthal's executive aides is letting it be known, if asked, that Mr. Blumenthal just might say yes if Mr. Carter happened to call with some specific post-election job in mind.

Why are businessmen so cagey? Why don't they just come out right out and say: "I want to be Secretary of Commerce."

One New York investment banker who has been mentioned as a possibility for Secretary of the Treasury was shocked at the suggestion. "It really hurts you if it's obvious that you're lobbying for a job," he said.

George W. Ball, a senior partner at the Wall Street firm of Lehman Brothers, is one New Yorker who has been on just about everybody's shopping list. Mr. Ball, a former Under Secretary of State, has been one of the three or four foreign affairs experts cited as prime candidates for Secretary of State in a Carter Administration.

Ball is running hard for the job is heightened by the recent publication of his book "Diplomacy for a Crowded World," by his testimony before the Democratic platform committee, and by well-publicized speeches before such groups as the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

Would he like to be Secretary of State? "I told the Governor a long time ago that I'd do anything I could to help him," said Mr. Ball. "But I'm not sitting around panting or trying to maneuver myself into something."

Of the published speculation, he said: "It's really getting to be kind of an embarrassment. My only problem is that I wrote a book and I'm a garrulous type."

Some businessmen not only have contributed money to a political campaign, but also have gained exposure by serving on advisory committees or by sponsoring gatherings for the candidates.

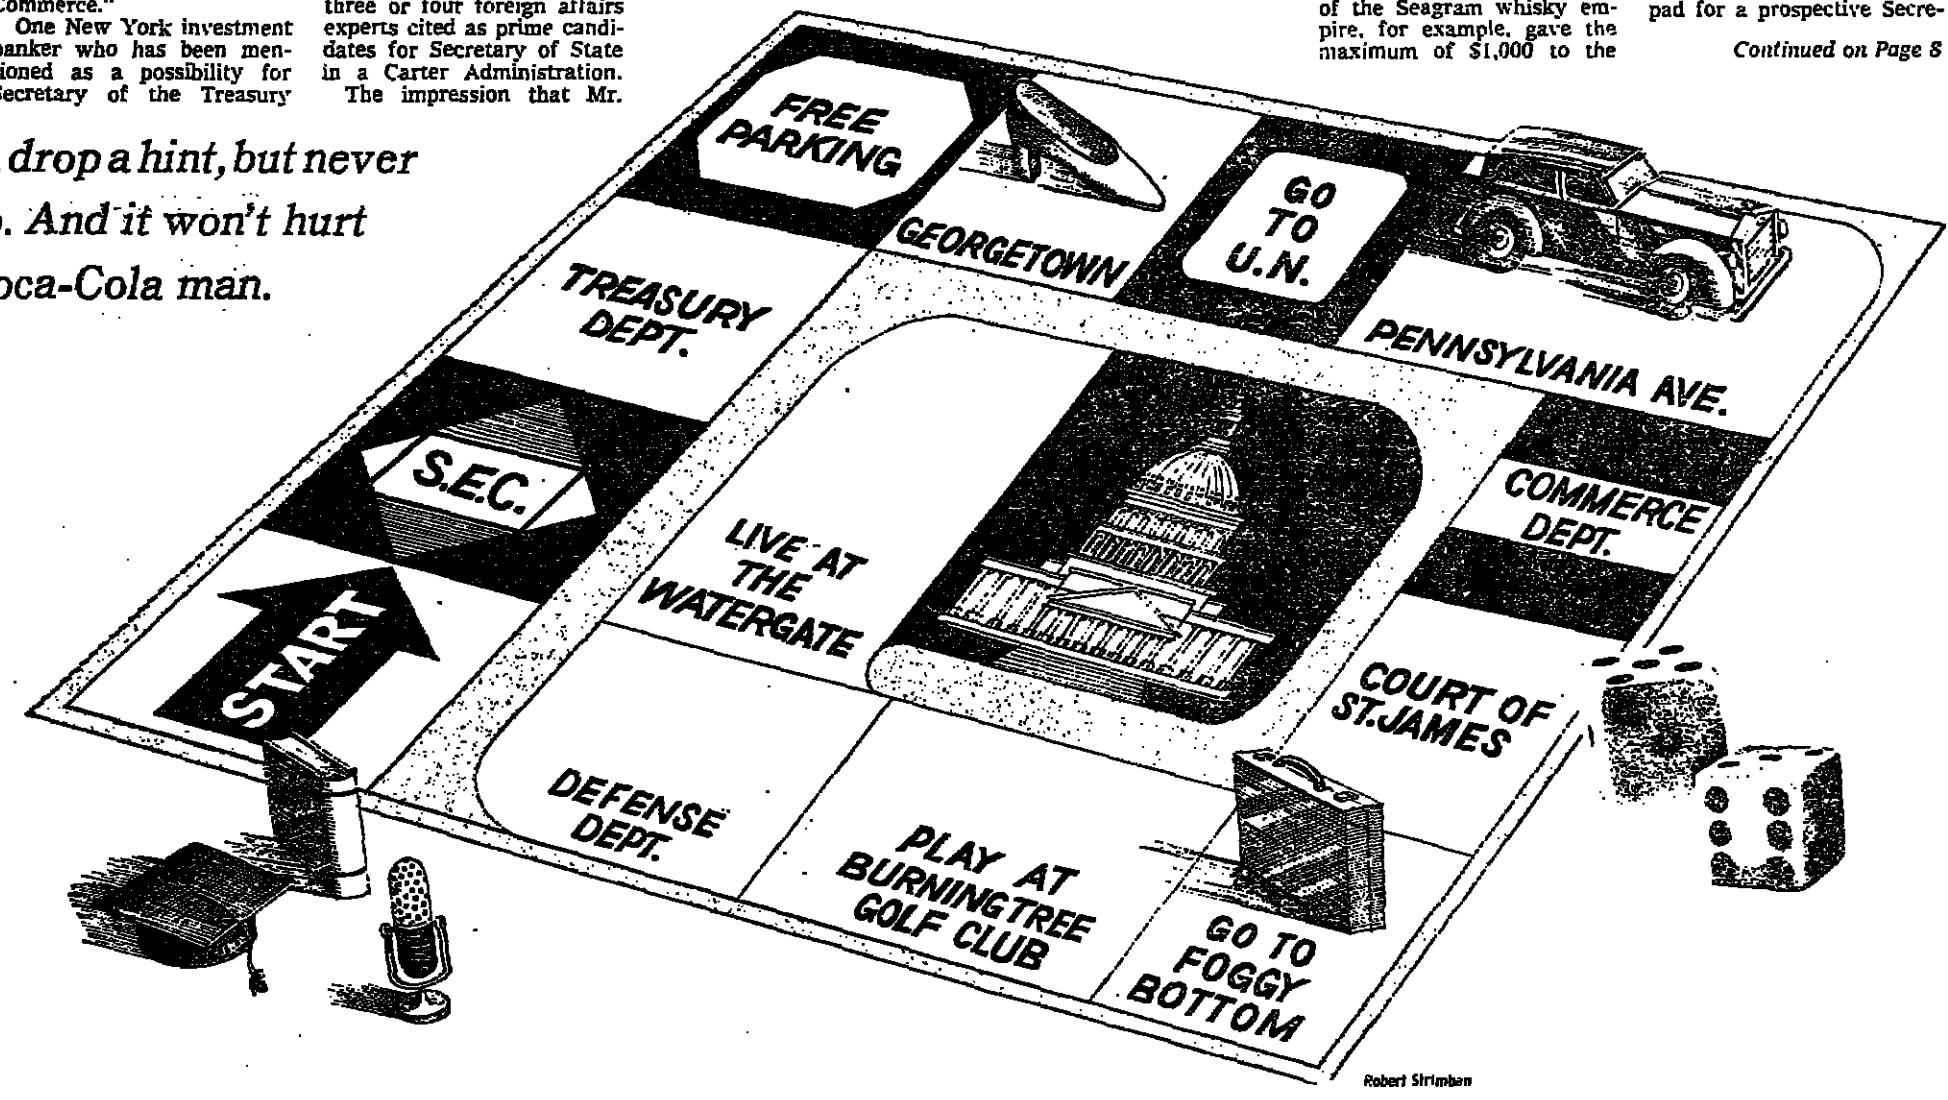

Edgar M. Bronfman, head of the Seagram whisky empire, for example, gave the maximum of $1,000 to the Carter campaign, and, along with Henry Ford 2d, chairman of Ford Motor Company, and J. Paul Austin, chairman of the Coca-Cola Company, was co-host of the luncheon given for Mr. Carter at the "21" Club.

Mr. Austin is an old and good friend of Mr. Carter, and a position at his side is said to be a sound launching pad for a prospective Secre-

Motors Corporation always succeeds when its competitors are in trouble—but sometimes it's helped. Unfortunately, none of those things seem to be happening. The company's latest trouble is laid to its short, round Pacer car introduced in February 1975 to the accolades of the automotive press. It was small but wide and roomy and small cars were supposed to be in vogue, what with the energy crisis. And the Pacer carried the most original design to come out of Detroit since the A.M.C.'s own little Gremlin

(still in production) of 1970. "This car will pull us out of the slump ahead of the industry," predicted Roy D. Chapin Jr., the company chairman, when he introduced the Pacer. "It was a little too far out," he admits today. Indeed, while Big Three stylists were designing cars to look like boxes, A.M.C. was trying to sell a car that looked like an egg. "One identifiable problem with the car was that some people thought it was too much of a change. There was some concern with the strength of the car with all that glass, especially in back," he says, and the thin rear pillar to the roof.

At first the Pacer sold well—14,000 a month. "Our hopes were high," he said, and some company men talked of selling far more than 100,000 a year. But last fall sales fell and they are now running about 6,000 a month, or about 50,000 in the 1976 model year.

Thus, while the industry is going through a recovery—General Motors, Ford and Chrysler Corporation's retail car sales to date are 5.4 million, up 34 percent from last year—A.M.C. deliveries are at 158,493 cars, off 21 percent.

And while the Big Three reported combined net earnings of $2.7 billion for the first six months this year, A.M.C. lost $4 million in its June quarter and Mr. Chapin talks of a "substantial loss" for the fiscal year to end Sept. 30, which analysts translate to mean something more than $10 million.

"But our sales goal next year is 300,000," says Mr. Chapin who will be 61 years old next month. This model year about 256,000 A.M.C. cars are being sold, but "we had a painful restructuring of the company, to the point where we could make a profit at sales levels well below 300,000," he has said. He predicts a profit in the December quarter.

Of course, the edge of the precipice isn't an unusual position for the automaker.

This year's loss will be the ninth in its 23 year history, and be much smaller than fiscal 1975's $27.5 million loss.

"Remember that Chrysler a year ago was in a position where people were despairing of them staying in business. In four months all that changed. We don't need a lot of big victories to get going."

"As General Motors downsizes its cars (G.M.'s 1977 line due out in weeks will be shorter and lighter), you are going to see broader acceptance of smaller cars because G.M. has a tremendous effect on the market. People will see the virtue of small cars," says Mr. Chapin.

He's got some supporters.

Arvid Jouppti, an independent auto analyst in Detroit figures A.M.C. will rebound to a $30 million profit on $2.75 billion in sales next fiscal year.

"Long term, A.M.C. is going to make it. There is no question in my mind. They have got the cash flow to finance their changes. They have diversified with their Jeep and bus operations which have reduced their losses in the car business this year."

"When G.M. starts pushing fuel economy and talking about cutting weight, it's going to make present cars seem like Model T's," he says.

"Small cars will take a better percentage of the market in 1977, and A.M.C. stands to benefit. They were hurt this year because the small car market fell off," says David Healy, vice president of Drexel, Burnham & Company. "They will make a profit next year, they will survive, but whether they will prosper is something else again."

Meanwhile, American Motors is lightening its load, cutting white collar employment by 10 percent, or 200 to 300 people at its engineering center in Detroit and headquarters in nearby Southfield, Mich.

Feminist Credit Unions Grow

By BROOKS von RANSON

NEW HAVEN — Women seeking to make a quick—and feminist—impact in the financial world have started 18 credit unions around the nation in the past three years.

“There will be 50 next year,” predicts Doris Ellis of the First Pennsylvania Feminist Credit Union in Harrisburg.

The aims include counteracting what the women believe is discrimination by banks, providing small loans to women for business enterprises, and attempting to provide some financial base for feminist philosophy.

But the road’s been a rocky one.

First, the new credit unions, unlike many older ones, aren’t tied to the employees of any single company or the members of a particular union, the usual membership of a credit union. This means there’s no sponsor to help with the startup costs and problems, no office that can be convenient to large numbers of depositors, and worse, no payroll deduction plan that encourages savings and borrowing.

Second, the women themselves divide on the issue of what’s important: careful use of other people’s money, or the woman movement’s philosophy.

For example, at the Connecticut Feminist Federal Credit Union the loan delinquency rate has been high, although officials won’t reveal the figures. One year ago the entire staff quit. Staff members thought the institution should make loans to poor or non-white women even if the chances for getting the money repaid were slim by normal credit standards. The credit union’s board rejected that idea, the staff quit, the board ran the operation and now is in the black.

That Connecticut credit union, founded here two years ago this month, now has assets of $200,000 and 1,100 members. A branch was opened in Hartford last August.

“I think they’re very good businesswomen. They knew what they were doing,” says Phyllis Holt, a bank officer here who aided the Connecticut credit union women.

In another case, the first effort to tie together the feminist credit unions around the nation collapsed over a not-unsimilar issue. The first and largest of the group, the Feminist Federal Credit Union in Detroit, with $1.3 million in assets, pushed for a high priority effort to lend money quickly to women entrepreneurs through an association of the credit unions.

Most of the other feminist credit unions backed away from such fast and heavy investment and quit the group, which has since run into trouble trying to run a feminist center in crime-ridden downtown Detroit.

Susan Osborne of the New Haven feminist credit union, tries to demystify money man

The other credit unions then set up another association, this one called the Feminist Economic Alliance.

Traditionally, credit unions make loans for automobiles, vacations, bill paying or home improvements. The Connecticut union says it makes these all at 12 percent interest but it has also financed abortions, divorces, and even business items for women, including a Jeep for a woman contractor and sound equipment for a woman’s band.

What’s more, the credit union women believe they are making women more familiar with the world of money.

“I think we have successfully demystified the idea of money management for a lot of women,” says Susan Osborne who organized the Connecticut credit union. “We are teaching women to say if I can manage $10,000 a year, I can manage $100,000.”

So far, in addition to Detroit, Harrisburg and Connecticut, such feminist credit unions have been established in New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego, Miami, Seattle, Dallas and Houston, Washington, Pittsburgh, Cambridge, Mass., Charleston, S.C., and Denver, with one in Wisconsin waiting for charter approval.

A handful of women’s banks have been established, too, but the setting up of a credit union is much simpler. Also, “you can’t be actively involved in a bank; you can in a credit union,” says Priscilla Kania, a board member of the Connecticut credit union.

Unlike a bank, a credit union does not require heavy capitalization. The Connecticut credit union, for example, began with $135 chipped in by its 13 directors. They are likely to rely on voluntary help, at least at the beginning. They also may be chartered under state laws or federally through the Na-

Struthers Wells and Fertilizers

The world’s need for food is rapidly becoming as critical as the shortage of energy. Struthers Wells is one of the leading engineers, designers and fabricators of high pressure heat exchangers for ammonia plants, and patented Multiwall® urea reactors and ammonia synthesis converters, crystallizers and other equipment widely used in fertilizer designs and plants throughout the world.

Worldwide Fertilizers. Power. Petroleum. Environment. Energy Recovery.

Domestic companies planning overseas installations can also secure the same Struthers Wells’ engineering expertise and fabrication know-how that is available in the United States, in many of the major industrial countries of the world. The following equipment is available through the Paris engineering and sales office of Struthers Wells, or through our competent licensees:

- Feedwater heaters for commercial fossil fuel and nuclear power plants.
- Auxiliary heat exchangers for commercial power plants.
- Ammonia and urea plant Multiwall® reactors and high pressure heat exchangers.
- High pressure refinery and petrochemical heat exchangers.
- Secondary oil recovery steam generators.
- Phosphoric acid crystallizers.
- Fire tube and water tube process waste heat boilers.
- Incinerator waste heat boilers.
- Waste stream evaporators and crystallizers.
- Gas turbine waste heat boilers.
- Process furnaces.

If you are planning a new overseas or domestic facility or thinking of expanding an existing one, Struthers Wells’ designs are probably available to you near your plant.

Please write on your letterhead for a brochure listing the worldwide capabilities of Struthers Wells and a copy of our Annual Report.

ly reduced but we are not delaying any major products and will still be spending about $85 million to $100 million a year over the next few years. We will have the funds for this out of amortization and cash flow, with minimum dependence on earnings,” says Mr. Chapin.

Though many say American Motors is being hurt by disinterest in small cars this year, Japanese small car imports are selling well yet. A.M.C.’s share of domestic sales has fallen to 2.9 percent from 5 percent last year. “The share is pretty bad,” concedes Mr. Chapin, “but we are going to improve it and our sales next year.”

His hopes are founded on a new Pacer model, a station wagon version. “The concerns about the strength of the Pacer sedan were unfounded but the wagon will be a darned good antidote for it.”

“It has wide pillars around the glass and I think we can sell over 100,000 Pacers next year with the addition of the wagon. It is going to do a lot of missionary work for us.”

But there may be other problems connected to the Pacer that could plague American Motors for a few years.

For one, the Pacer is not a small, light car; it is a short, heavy (3,200 pounds) car, powered by the standard six cylinder engine. This means 16 miles per gallon mileage, and Americans who think of buying small cars may expect much higher mileage.

For another, the heavy use of glass almost demands the use of air conditioning, and adding air-automatic transmission, power brakes and power steering, all common on heavier cars, adds $800 to the price.

And, A.M.C., in the smaller car segment of the market, never until recently had a small, four cylinder engine. This kept it from competing fully for customers who want 25 or 30 miles per gallon from their cars. The company has bought a four cylinder line from Volkswagen, but now there’s the question of whether the light engine can provide enough power for its heavier small cars, the Pacer and older Gremlin (which probably compete with each other). The company also makes the compact Hornet and intermediate-size Matador models.

Ablondi, a Democratic lawyer from New York City, decided that only certain smaller shoe companies were in danger and recommended Federal assistance for these few. Under the rules, since a majority of four did not support one solution for the troubled industry, it was up to President Ford to choose whichever remedy he wanted. The President argued that tariffs would increase inflation—since they would increase the price consumers would pay for imports—and ordered Mr. Ablondi's recommendation into effect. A shoe industry lobbyist called this "burial assistance" and said: "When the commission decided for injury we thought it was marvelous. But then they split their vote on recommendation and we got nothing. The President was able to go along with the minority of one." Such unclear decisions have come in four of the 14 import relief cases handled by the I.T.C.

Among other I.T.C. doings that have caused an eyebrow or two to raise: Chairman Will E. Leonard, a Louisiana Democrat and former aid to Senator Russell Long, spiced his decision on the shoe case with shoe-related proverbs and rhymes such as: Cock a doodle doo! My dame has lost her shoe; My master's lost his jidling-stick. And knows not what to do. This may have increased immeasurably the literary merit of the Government report, but made shoe makers feel they weren't taken seriously enough although Mr. Leonard voted for them. And Daniel Minchew, Georgia Democrat and former aide to Senator Herman E. Talmadge, held a midnight press conference to accuse staff members of "sabotage" for not mailing out a commission decision by a prescribed deadline. He was photographed personally carrying a handful of letters to a mailbox. The I.T.C. staff director, it seems, angered by the commission's habit of making decisions late in the evening of deadline days, told the secretaries to go home at the normal time to get even. The other directors are all Republicans: Catherine May Bedell, former Congresswoman from Washington, George M. Moore, of Kentucky, a lawyer and a former Congressional aide, and Joseph O. Parker of Kansas, a former lobbyist for the poultry industry. A plan to reorganize the commission staff and clear up some internal disputes is depleted by a series of dead-lock votes on what to do, and the six are deeply divided on procedure changes proposed by Congress. "Congress and the executive wanted different points of view and different ways of analyzing facts when they set this up," says Mr. Leonard. "This is not supposed to be a monolithic group." Indeed, the only major change in the I.T.C. procedures has been a successful move to take some hearings on trade problems out of Washington to the areas affected by imports, such as to Florida and California for the honey hearings and Georgia shrimp ports for the crustacean crisis. Congress, unhappy with its 1974 work, is trying to change its creation. House and Senate motions, passed and to be fused in conference, call for: Adding a seventh commission member to cut the number of 3-3 decisions on trade and administrative matters. Allowing only commissioners who find injury on a case to vote on the remedy, preventing dissenting members from watering down the majority's effectiveness. This change, however, has been defeated in a House committee and may not survive the conference. Increasing the chairman's power, which Congressmen figure, should end some of the bickering between the commissioners and the agency staff. "The I.T.C. has been a flop," says one Senate staff aide working on trade problems. "There is already so much confusion in the trade picture, this is one area that should be cleaned up." The agency has been keeping its staff of over 400 economists and investigators busy writing lengthy reports on long-term trade issues and reviewing claims by American companies that they are being hurt by unfair practices by foreigners. These cases are more complex than simple trade relief demands since they involve not just the volume of imports but pricing and marketing practices. The commission could even order an import ban if the charges are proved, but the President can overturn such rulings if he wishes. The first major case in this area is now starting: a complaint from television manufacturers that five major Japanese companies are using unfair pricing arrangements to flood the market here with low priced color TV sets. Even the old I.T.C. building, squeezed between the National Portrait Gallery and the new Federal Bureau of Investigation headquarters in downtown Washington, has its troubles. Chairman Leonard had to move out of his second story office after it partially collapsed because of the subway construction in a nearby street. ice" accounted for two-thirds of that. Along with growth, however, came consolidation. Many smaller companies, unable to invest in new equipment, have either closed or been acquired by others. Ten years ago this country had about 2,500 ice-making companies, most of them family-owned. Today the total is closer to 1,000. Mechanical refrigeration, in railroad cars, trucks and storage depots, cannot be used for all food products because it dehydrates some of them. Corn and certain other vegetables, plus fish and poultry, demand ice. And companies that need ice regularly, like their consumer counterparts, often have to supplement their in-house capacity by buying outside in peak periods. The traditional method of manufacturing ice has been to freeze it in 300 and 400-pound blocks inside rectangular metal cans—a process that takes from 22 to 32 hours. It is then sawed into ice cubes or ground up and sprayed over poultry or produce. The making of block ice has been giving way in recent years to two other processes. The turbo method freezes the ice in thin layers, like sheets of plywood, ranging in thickness from five-eighths inch to one inch. The sheets are then fragmented into irregular chips, sorted, bagged and sold. Consumers in the Northeast favor the larger size fragments, approximating a cubic inch. Southerners and Westerners prefer the smaller pieces. No one knows why. Then there is the Voght system, under which ice is frozen around the outside of a metal tube which is then slipped out. The resulting cylinder is sliced into small circular pieces, each with a hole in the middle. Voght proponents say this kind of ice has a larger cooling surface for a faster chill. More important, both new methods take only about 25 minutes, pour to freeze. Most of the country's ice plants are still family-owned. But some of the largest, Atlantic Ice, a division of Munford Inc. in Atlanta, American Consumer Industries in Philadelphia and Southeast Public Service in Kansas City—are not. The Southland Corporation's Reddy Ice division in Dallas claims to be No. 1 in sales of packaged ice and No. 3 in overall production. Southland is best known for its ownership of the 7-11 convenience store chain that claims to service 4.5 million customers a day. That operation, however, was a byproduct of the ice business. The Southland Ice Company, as it was originally called, was formed in 1927 with eight ice plants in the Dallas area. Customers drove up to the plants' loading docks, buying a big chunk of ice and taking it home on the running board. John Green, a manager at one of the plants, decided to try to sell bread and milk to those same customers. From the ice docks, it was but one more step to building small stores. Thus the 7-11 chain was born.

The infighting is heavy, Chairman Leonard's sense of humor isn't always appreciated—even the building seems to be falling down.

And what is the quality of ice these days? The National Ice Association claims that commercially made ice, manufactured under Food and Drug Administration regulations, is purer than the cubes that come out of the refrigerator compartment. Both are frozen from tap water, but the commercial product is supposed to be "tasteless and odorless," have no chemical impurities, and be longer-lasting because it is "frozen harder."

In any event, even the most partisan promoters agree that differences in clarity, purity, tastelessness and durability are far from critical. The key consideration is convenience. For a large cocktail party, for example, most people don't want to start making ice a few days in advance and then possibly have to shove aside the six-month supply of TV Dinners, or bought-on-sale meat, to store it. After all, as one iceman says, this is a society willing to pay a premium to avoid slicing cheese. Ernest Dickenson writes frequently for The New York Times on business subjects.

49 ELECTRIC UTILITIES NOW YIELDING UP TO 9 1/2% to 10% WITH UNUSUAL GROWTH POTENTIAL

Hornblower's analyst believes utility stocks currently offer investors a rare opportunity to gain high current yields plus excellent potential for capital appreciation.

Our new 14-page Monthly Utility Service tells you why and gives a ranking of 49 of America's leading power companies according to our estimate of investment risk. You'll learn which 27 utilities we regard as combining reasonable safety with yields as high as 9.3% and 22 more-speculative companies yielding up to 10.3%. Plus a new yardstick—one that we believe to be the single most important variable—to assess the investment potential of a utility.

Mortgage Company and the Rainier Fi- nance Company.

The bank won national awards with an ad campaign that ended with a fillip of social consciousness: "So start your savings campaign today with Rainier—or any other bank for that matter."

Corporate loans expanded 100 percent. To intensify such wholesale banking ef- forts, Mr. Truex in June created a world banking division, a merge of corporate banking with the international division. He also expanded the bank's computer capacity and reached down into his organization to promote people from within. Mr. Truex decentralized by put- ting the 120 Washington branches under six regional managers, making each department a profit center with annual goals. Loan decisions were removed from a headquarters committee and pushed down to regional levels.

Then, in January, 250 persons were laid off. Local accounts had it that ter- mination notices had been placed on desks during a coffee break. "Untrue!" said Mr. Truex. "Each person was in- formed personally and privately and then handed a letter." Other large banks tended to reduce staff in piecemeal fashion, and that was "murder" on those waiting for the ax to fall, he says.

For those who did survive, productiv- ity gains paid off. Rainier now has the highest-paid tellers in the state.

Mr. Truex—who feels "the failure of some good bank managements is that they have involved themselves too much in day-to-day management"—won't be specific, but says Rainier "has expanded Boeing business significantly in the last year or so."

Other ties to the air include some Pan American World Airways business, some from Aloha Airlines of Hawaii and Western Airlines, and starting last year, being the tanker for the large regional carrier, Alaska Airlines.

But Mr. Truex, who sits on the board of National Airlines insists that "I don't drum for business personally." The expansion of the Boeing business, for example, "was just a good job by our corporate banking people."

Non-air business involves clients ranging from the Seahawks, Seattle's new football franchise, to Campbell Soup, Georgia Pacific, Green Giant, Weyerhaeuser and International Telephone and Telegraph.

Perched on the edge of the Pacific rim, Rainier has built up international operations to the point where it ac- counts for 20 percent of all volume. It has "wholesale" offices in London and Tokyo and under Mr. Truex has added two "retail" branches in Hong Kong to its original stable of five. The Hong Kong units, he says, are two to three times as profitable as stateside branches.

Major overseas clients include Kawa- saki and Nippon Steel of Japan, West Germany's Telefunken telephone compa- ny and Britain's Dunlop tire organiza- tion.

Three years ago, Mr. Truex said: "If we were operating at the same level of profitability as the nation's more suc- cessful one-bank holding companies, we would have produced about one-third more in net operating income in 1973. It will take us at least three years to reach that point."

But he surpassed that target. By 1975, net operating income had nearly dou- bled the 1973 level, reaching $18.5 mil- lion. In the first six months of this year, profits hit $10.0 million, highest in the bank's history. Net loan losses were the lowest of the nation's top 50 banks in 1975—0.096 percent of year-end net loans.

Return on average assets, meanwhile, has doubled, to 0.72 percent, since 1972. That compares with a return of 0.5 percent at BankAmerica and 0.4 percent at Charter New York. And the bank's first public debt issue $30 million of 10-year, 9.5 percent notes, was market- ed under Mr. Truex's direction in July last year.

As Mr. Truex sees it, the goal at Rai- nier is not to be the biggest. "That decision leads to foolishness," he says. "But while it may sound utopian, there is no reason why we cannot be the best performer in the country."

Discover the NON-BANK ACCOUNT

Dreyfus Liquid Assets gives you free checks plus daily dividends.

Before you put your money into a no-interest checking account, get the facts about the "non-bank account." Many people who have money which must be kept available have discovered this differ- ent way with a Dreyfus Liquid Assets account, which gives you both the convenience of free check-writing and the finan- cial benefit of daily dividends.

Dreyfus Liquid Assets is an investment company which pools the money belong- ing to thousands of investors and purchases low-risk, high-yield money market instru- ments. These obligations usually pay higher rates of interest than those offered by savings accounts—sometimes much higher—but are available only in large de- nominations beyond the means of the av- erage investor.

Dreyfus Liquid Assets shareholders are credited with dividends from these invest- ments daily—seven days a week. And your investment is totally liquid. You can with- draw some or all of your money at any time simply by writing a check for $500 or more.

The amount withdrawn continues to earn interest until the check clears. You receive cancelled checks and a statement of your account quarterly.

There is no charge when you buy shares, no charge for the checks and no monthly maintenance charge. You may open an account for as little as $2,500.

Tire stocks, viewed as a basic industry investment, showed little slippage in the recent strike.

bined 894,000 shares. Good-year, by contrast, the industry giant, had attracted 274 institutions who held 9.7 million shares and General Tire had a loyal following of 38 who grabbed up 3 million shares.

As for the industry-wide outlook, some analysts, forecasting a strong recovery when tire production gets into full gear again, believe that certain issues have the potential to reach again toward 1960's levels. Other analysts—and there hasn't been much analysis of the tire stocks, truth to tell, since the strike began—aren't so sure.

As things stand now, Uniroyal has recovered to a close last Friday of 8%, having hit a low of 5% in 1974 after a high of 33% in 1968. Goodrich is at 25, still far from the high of 66 it set in 1969 but well off the 1970 low of 12%. Of the others, whose price swings have tended to be less volatile, Goodyear is at 22%, Genera Tire at 22%, and Firestone at 23%.

"The key thing," according to Mr. Haydon, "is the degree of lost demand caused Firestone — $2.20 and $3.65.

General Tire—$4.40 and $5.10.

"Tires are basically a commodity," Mr. Mills argues "and this industry in the past has been tremendously competitive on a price basis as companies strive to gain a larger share of the market."

But the pent-up demand in the wake of the long strike, he believes, will ease that situation this time around.

"It should take anywhere from six to nine months to rebuild tire inventories to proper levels and that means close to capacity production for the companies," Mr. Mills says. "I don't expect any real discounting before the Memorial Day or Fourth of July holidays in 1977."

Part of the production bulge Mr. Mills envisages will reflect the need for space tires. "Very few spares were shipped with the new cars sold since mid-May," he notes. "Typically, the car buyer received instead a certificate stating that he is entitled to a spare tire when these become available."

In fact, some price hikes for tires already have gone into effect. Some analysts believe that when the dust has settled, price increases for passenger car tires will average in the area of 10 percent. Somewhat larger increases are expected for truck tires, which take more labor per unit and more high-cost natural rubber.

But nothing is ever that simple.

Mr. Haydon of Merrill Lynch, for example, takes note of the fact that only last week Sears, Roebuck & Company was cutting prices for a set of four steel-belted auto tires by anywhere from $27 to $67. This reduction, returned prices to their 1973 level.

Michelin is a key Sears supplier, Mr. Haydon points out. The French-owned company, which has poured millions into five new tire plants in South Carolina and is scheduled to pour millions more into two other plants there, is out to increase its market share in the United States.

"What does this mean in the long run for tire prices?" says Mr. Haydon. "That's what I keep asking myself."

For Goodyear, which earned $2.24 last year, Mr. Haydon is estimating up to $2.10 for this year and up to $3.15 the following year.

Goodrich netted $1.65 a share in 1975 and the Merrill Lynch analyst hasn't yet formulated an estimate for this year. But he can envisage the company earning "in excess of $5.50 a share" in 1977.

For Firestone, he sees $2.00 in the current fiscal year and up to $3.20 in the following year. Firestone netted $2.36 in fiscal 1975. General Tire earned $2.82 in fiscal 1975, and its profits for the current year, thanks to continued production, are projected at "4.00 plus" by Mr. Haydon. But for next year, he envisages net income of only around $4.25.

Out in Cleveland, which happens to be much closer to the tiremaking plants than Wall Street, Harry W. Mills of Prescott, Ball & Turben, takes a more sanguine view of the profit outlook.

His estimates are based on the assumptions that the tire producers will be back at work by Aug. 30 and that there will be no prolonged strike in the auto industry, where contracts expire Sept. 15.

Mr. Mills, who doesn't follow the fortunes of Uniroyal, comes up with these per-share profit estimates:

Goodyear—$2.05 this year and $3.50 next year.
Goodrich—2.40 and $6.50.

A new way to invest in Tax-Free Municipals.

No sales charge or redemption fee.

Ours is a new approach to tax-free investment. Fidelity Municipal Bond Fund is the first continuously managed, open-end municipal bond fund, without any sales charge or redemption fee.

Avoiding such costs can represent substantial savings (up to 4-3/4% of the amount you invest when compared with municipal bond investments that include a sales charge).

Put another way, all your investment dollars go to work at the outset to obtain as high a level of tax-free income as is consistent with the preservation of capital.

Daily tax-free income.

Income is credited to your account daily. Those who wish current income may elect to receive income in cash on a monthly basis.

Those seeking to build the value of their investment may choose our free monthly re-investment privilege, thereby automatically compounding their earnings tax-free.

Daily liquidity.

The Fund will redeem shares, free of charge, at net asset value whenever you desire. You'll receive the full current value of the shares you redeem no matter how large or small the transaction.

This redemption feature protects you from the uncertainties of supply and demand that exist in the secondary markets. It offers an important degree of flexibility that only an open-end municipal bond fund can offer.

Diversification of investment dollars.

Your money in the Fund is invested in a carefully chosen portfolio of municipal bonds. The potential risk of any single investment is greatly reduced.

Our initial investment requirement is $5,000. Yet, you receive the same diversification advantages otherwise available only to people investing several hundred thousand dollars.

Full-time investment management.

The Fund is under continuous management, another important benefit to investors.

Beyond the guideline ratings of Moody's and Standard & Poor's, there is little the average investor can rely on to judge the value of an issue.

However, our supervision, both in the purchase and continuing review of the Fund's portfolio, is designed to preserve your capital and help increase your rate of income.

A note on income: since our portfolio will change to reflect changing market conditions and new investment opportunities, we do not advertise fixed rates of return. For a current yield quotation, simply call us toll-free.

Should you have questions about this investment opportunity, we invite your inquiry by mail. Better yet, call us now. Our knowledgeable staff will gladly assist you.

tary of Commerce (A spokesman for Mr. Bronfman said the whiskey executive harbored no ambitions to serve in Washington).

Others at the "21" Club luncheon also being mentioned as possible cabinet officers include Felix G. Rohatyn, the investment banker from Lazard Freres & Company who is currently serving as chairman of the Municipal Assistance Corporation.

For the record, Mr. Rohatyn says going to Washington is "not something I yearn for." Associates say, however, that a job such as Secretary of the Treasury would be welcomed, although Mr. Rohatyn's standing with the Cartel group may be somewhat clouded by his closeness to New York's Governor Hugh Carey.

Another name that pops up from time to time in the cabinet-guessing game is Peter C. Peterson, chairman of Lehman Brothers (and therefore a potential rival of his partner, Mr. Ball).

Mr. Peterson, who attended the "21" Club luncheon, is a former Secretary of Commerce in the Nixon Administration. A Republican and former protégé of Senator Charles Percy, Republican of Illinois, who was his boss at Bell & Howell Company, Mr. Peterson left the Nixon Administration before the Watergate storm broke. He is often mentioned when political discussions turn to bipartisan appointments.

Speculation about possible high-level aides sometimes revolves around advisers already selected by Mr. Carter for specific pre-election tasks.

Carolyn Shaw Bell, an economics professor at Wellesley College, first came into contact with Mr. Carter during a panel discussion in Boston, just before the end of Hampshire primary. She says she was impressed with Mr. Carter's approach to economic matters, and was invited to serve on an economic task force that was advising the candidate after her attitude became known.

As for a possible position in Washington, Mrs. Bell says, "I can't say it hasn't occurred to me, but I haven't really given it much thought."

There is some speculation that Mr. Carter could outdo Richard Nixon who named a woman, Marina von Neumann Whitman, to the Council of Economic Advisers, by naming Mrs. Bell as chairman.

While attention focuses on potential cabinet officials or heads of regulatory agencies, many New Yorkers are setting their sights somewhat lower.

Roger H. Lourie, a group product manager for Time-Life Books, for instance, says he would enjoy a position on some advisory committee or commission.

Mr. Lourie, who heads New York's Lexington Democratic Club, a liberal stronghold, has done volunteer work for the candidate.

After November, he says he will write to Mr. vanden Heuvel to let the appropriate Carter aide in Atlanta and to the Government regulator in the selected area to make known his wishes for a position.

Despite the jockeying and leaking, the planning and plotting, little is known for certain about Mr. Carter's current preferences for high-level appointees. His campaign organization is taking the position that it would be presumptuous and premature to say anything until after the November elections.

Still, several factors seem certain to influence Mr. Carter's selections.

For one, his organization is far less beholden than most regular party groups to traditional party backers, partly because of the reduced role of the big contributor, and partly because Mr. Carter sprang from Plains, Georgia, with few close political ties or debts to repay in the business community.

The key official in the talent search process is Mr. Watson, a 37-year-old attorney from the Atlanta law firm of King & Spalding, whose clients include Mr. Austin's Coca-Cola Company.

Mr. Watson is a law partner of Charles Kirbo, Mr. Carter's close political adviser, and is himself part of the Carter inner circle of strategists. From an office in Atlanta, he is setting up a computerized system that will help provide the names of prospects for thousands of jobs that would need to be filled in a Carter Administration.

About 200 of the positions would require personal attention from Mr. Carter, says Mr. Watson, including top cabinet and agency jobs, as well as the positions of undersecretary, and some of the assistant secretaries.

Although the computer is being fed, no offers are being made, according to Mr. Watson. "All we're doing is gathering the names of folks who can help us in thinking through some of the issues, as well as people who could serve ably in an Administration."

Mr. Watson says the appearance of a trial balloon, or a mention in a column, is not held against any candidate for a high-level post, but he adds that over-aggressive behavior is not viewed as helpful to anyone's cause.

As for political activity on behalf of the candidate, he indicates that it does no harm if a job-seeker is on the Carter bandwagon.

"Governor Carter feels very strongly that he needs to bring the best people available into the Government," Mr. Watson says. "To the extent that the best people are working in the campaign, they will be considered. It is a plus to be able to see people in operation and you can't take political support completely out of the equation."

Carter aides say a special effort also is being made to identify qualified women to serve in a Carter Administration.

To that end, the "51.3 percent Committee" named after the percentage of women in the national population began several months ago to bring more women into the campaign.

According to Miss Lutkefender, the committee currently is contacting women's organizations, as well as women who already hold prestigious positions in Government. It is also coordinating an "in-house talent bank" being set up by the Democratic National Committee in Washington.

Meantime, experienced politicians are cautioning eager jobseekers to keep a low profile.

As of last week, the surest way to get done in," says Mr. vanden Heuvel, "is to have your name mentioned three months before the election." Mr. vanden Heuvel is a former Kennedy supporter who first broke into New York's social circles when he married (and since was divorced from) the daughter of Dr. Jules Stein, a founder of MCA Inc., and a friend of Ronald Reagan.

Despite such advice, some public figures continue to signal their moves.

Mr. Duke, who was chief of protocol in the Kennedy and Johnson Administrations and served at various times as ambassador to El Salvador, Denmark and Spain, said he would devote his energies to the Presidential and Senatorial campaigns.

One of last week, the Carter camp had shown signs of taking Mr. Duke into its inner circles—or for that matter, its outer circles. Mr. Duke, asked whether his actions were designed to win him a spot in Washington, answered: "That's not what we're talking about. I'm going to do this for the good of the country. We'll just take something like that into consideration when it comes, but I'm certainly not looking for it."

WASHINGTON REPORT

Limits Carter Plans for Spending

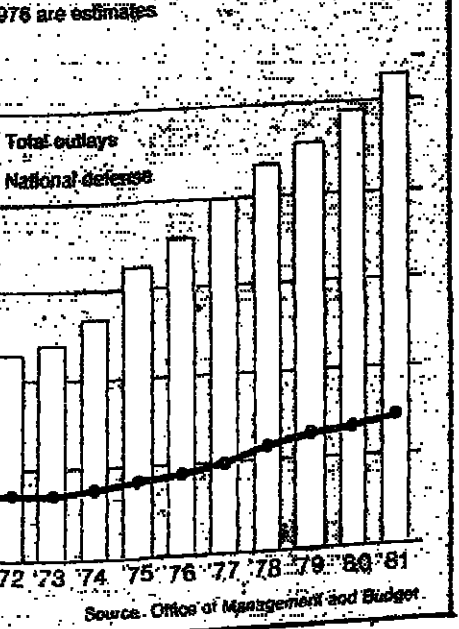

The most important measure of the limit was spelled out by Mr. Carter in Plains, Ga., last week. It is his intention, he said, to hold Government spending to no more than about 20 percent of the gross national product...

programs continues to grow and reflects inflation to some degree. The revenue growth, as the Carter advisers see it, will be used in part to reduce the budget deficit...

Assuming the mathematics is right, and assuming that the new President and Congress would stick to the general policy goal and its implied limits on spending, there apparently need not be any big new inflationary thrust from fiscal policy in a Carter Administration.

Neither, of course, would there be any tax reduction. The fiscal dividend is calculated at $8 billion to $14 billion a year, and it is this amount that sets the initial lid on spending growth.

For Federal Spending

This calculates what revenues would be under existing tax law if the unemployment rate were 4 percent, and it can be used to show the trend of revenue growth as the economy expands rapidly enough to reduce the unemployment rate (now 7.8 percent) gradually toward that goal.

A Wall Street View

On Wall Street, of course, campaign promises are simply more grist to the stock market mill. And the Argus Research Corporation, for one, not only refuses to believe but also finds in disbelief a reason to be bullish: The strong possibility of a Democratic victory in the November Presidential election raises the question of what policy a Carter Administration may follow regarding defense spending...

THE ECONOMIC SCENE

Prices, Jobs and Voters

By JOHN M. LEE

Political caricature that Republicans vote in heads and Democrats with their hearts. In terms, this translates into an intellectual with inflation and an emotional response to rent. This year, the issues of prices and jobs are monumental as ever as President Ford and Carter set out to woo the voters. But strategy is what appears to be a more conservative mood.

Mr. Ford widely said that the economy will be a gain issue, and as the battle is joined, the look takes on a particular interest. What the will find is that a funny thing has happened to the recovery boom.

Mr. Carter has turned timid, and in a recovery it entirely on retail sales, this could be disastrous. The stock market has stalled. Housing is slow, and industrial growth is inchoating along. Investors love it. The questions are whether the recovery will be as strong as it appears to be and whether Mr. Carter will be tempted to celebration.

Mr. Ford's sale for jubilation in this course is that it has proceeded far faster than almost anyone had anticipated. His argument against faster-growth policies is that inflation is faster than the recovery. He argues that inflation is faster than the recovery. He argues that inflation is faster than the recovery.

Mr. Ford's point to the fact that consumer prices are up 6.3 percent in the last year and the year-to-year increase in July was 6.8 percent. The double-digit horrors are far behind us.

Mr. Ford's reason for inflation's decline is that the demand in general has throttled back to a level 4.3 percent rate from the feverish 9.2 percent first quarter. The money markets have been grateful with an unexpected (and post-nominal) decline in rates.

Mr. Ford's ill-tempered stock market has gone its way, sputtering and stalling around the level on the Dow Jones industrial average. It is the Ford performance but is uncertain the possibility of a Carter Presidency.

Mr. Ford's objective standard, President Ford has a record. Taking office two years ago, he was falling apart, he at first totally situation, declaring he would whip inflation income tax surcharge and cuts in Federal the turn of the year, however, he had se and proposed a tax rebate to stimulate.

Mr. Ford's The Democrats upped the ante, and a reduction and rebate in the spring of 1975 isness recovery.

Mr. Ford's upward pace has, on average, been so it's easy to forget we are 17 months into Key indicators, such as industrial producing starts, have still not attained their pre-recession highs. The recent slump was the deepest since World War II. The present recovery is the slowest.

The question for Mr. Carter is whether the voters will endure it, and we suspect the answer is yes. The long range effects of the American experience with the most virulent peacetime inflation are still not clear. But inflation has burned the middle class and wage earners alike and has scarred the poor more than the rich. This experience has contributed to the more cautious, conservative mood. The intellectual concern over creeping inflation during the Eisenhower years has been converted to public outrage. By harping on inflation, Mr. Ford seems on the right track.

What then of the jobless issue? It seems important to remember that a record 87.9 million Americans have jobs and that real earnings are at last rising faster than inflation. Although unemployment has recently risen to 7.4 million people (7.8 percent of the labor force), this does not seem either an overwhelming political handicap or an opportunity. Partly because of humane jobless benefits, there has been surprising public tolerance of high unemployment.

All this might seem a Ford advantage, but Mr. Carter has positioned himself in the economic center. Although he endorsed the Humphrey-Hawkins bill (which would pledge Government action to achieve full employment) at the prodding of labor and black groups, his heart doesn't seem to be in it. While expressing traditional Democratic concern for a rapid reduction in unemployment, he talks of a rifle rather than a shotgun to deal with chronic situations. His economic aides confess uncertainty over the most effective policies.

On the inflation side, there are already efforts underway to depict Mr. Carter as a Democratic big spender who would run amuck with a "do-anything" Congress, and there seems some validity to the President's claim that only his vetoes have kept Congress in check. But Congress should perhaps get some credit for having adopted a fairly moderate budget ceiling this year, thus reducing the rate of growth in Federal spending. This is unusual business indeed for an election year. In addition, the Federal Reserve has kept a firm hold on the money supply, unlike the situation in 1972.

This more moderate tone could well continue in the first year or so of either a Carter or a second Ford Administration. Fiscal policy (that is, Government spending and taxes) is set for the year ending Sept. 30, and the budget for the 1978 fiscal year is due before the new President takes office. Monetary policy is in the hands of an independent Fed headed by the strong-minded Arthur F. Burns. With the Burns policy of moderate growth and ample money but fairly tight interest rates enjoying broad public support, there seems little prospect of change.

Whether Mr. Carter more or less accepts this situation or promises to change it could be one of the more interesting campaign developments. He has already proved adept at identifying himself with the national mood in his appeal to public trust. His reading of what Americans want economically should be equally fascinating.

MARKETS IN REVIEW

Dow Breaks 1,000 And Retreats Again

The stock market, after once again piercing the 1,000 level in the Dow Jones industrial average last week, fell sharply back again. At the close of trading on Friday, the key barometer was off 16.12 points at 974.07. During the first two days of trading, the Dow had advanced and on Wednesday managed to touch 1,002.33 before selling pressure settled in for the rest of the week.

Wednesday marked the eleventh time this year that the Dow had pushed through the psychologically important 1,000 barrier before falling back. As one analyst remarked, there is "a pickup in selling every time the Dow pokes its head above 1,000."

Turnover on the New York Stock Exchange advanced to 84 million shares from 76.59 million shares the week before. The increase was attributed mostly to stepped-up institutional activity.

The market's upswing in the first two trading days last week was partly attributed to Wall Street's growing belief that Gerald Ford would win the Republican Presidential nomination at the convention in Kansas City. When the event came to pass, the excitement died, and the President's choice of a running mate really put the damper on, as it appeared to help Jimmy Carter's chance of winning.

Negative factors included profit-taking, a downward revision by the Commerce Department of its growth estimate for second-quarter gross national product and the Commerce Department's report that corporate profits had grown only 1.8 percent in the second quarter.

The week's biggest loser was Hewlett-Packard which fell 9 1/2 to 89 3/4 on Friday on lower earnings. For the week the stock was down 12 1/2.

The credit markets also ran out of steam last week following almost four weeks of steady advances, with prices declining slightly.

Power Plant Simulators— Nuclear and/or Fossil Fuel

EAI... WHERE YOU CAN BE PART OF A TOP MATH-MODEL TEAM!

A world leader in the design and manufacture of analog/hybrid computers, we have exciting openings on the team we're expanding to develop math models of continuous systems for real-time simulation.

Several positions are immediately available; below is a partial listing. To qualify, candidates must have a BS in EE, ME, CE, Nuclear Engineering, Physics or Computer Science. Also necessary: strong background in applied math, at least 2 years of advanced FORTRAN IV programming, and some experience with math modeling and simulation of continuous systems, using FORTRAN/DCR, CSSL, or CSMP—preferably for simulations of industrial processes or chemical systems. However, candidates with no work experience but possessing an MS or PhD will also be considered.

MODELING/SENIOR LEVEL POSITION

Primary and Steam Supply Systems of PWR

Candidates in addition to above-mentioned general qualifications, must have an MS (or higher degree) in Nuclear Engineering or Physics; plus 3 years of programming and 4 years modeling experience of related systems. Must also understand theory, design and operation of nuclear PWR power plant systems.

Reactor Core & Associated Instrumentation

Along with the basic qualifications all candidates must have, applicants for positions in this area must know both the practical and theoretical aspects of PWR and BWR reactors; and have had exposure to different methods of modeling all or part of a reactor core plus experience in at least one method covering reactor kinetics, thermal hydraulics and reactivity due to various sources. You should be familiar, as well as design capable, for predicting reactor behavior under normal and abnormal conditions.

CONTROL SYSTEMS

An excellent opportunity for a candidate who not only fulfills the above-mentioned minimum requirements, but is experienced with advanced FORTRAN programming and digital operating systems, and who understands control theory, instrumentation systems, analyzers and real-time simulation of control systems. Familiarity with electrical elementaries and wiring diagrams also necessary.

PROGRAMMER ANALYST

Exceptional opportunity for an individual who can perform well defined tasks in systems type programming for training simulators, simulations of power plant monitoring computer systems, and modifications to existing systems programs in above areas. To qualify, you must have a BS (or higher) degree in Engineering or Computer Science, plus 2 years of more of Assembly Language programming, and some experience in FORTRAN.

We offer salaries fully commensurate with your experience and qualifications, and comprehensive benefits package. long and intense struggle between the contenders for its nomination, the Republican convention has managed to bring about a sense of unity to the process of selecting a of votes, the delegates to Gerald R. Ford over what had been the longest intraparty challenge since President Ford's victory in 1974, and uncertain until before the delegates' convention ended with a day of harmony between former antagonists. The proceedings gave the sense of a buoyancy at enjoyed by the delegates they met last month, and their nominee, who had been reelected.

help Mr. Ford continue to meet the challenge. Mr. Ford should be helped by the fact that he transformed him, in a appointed, accidental Republican nominee, the victor over one most powerful political himself concedes that this campaign will be for the Republicans, rehearsed acceptance, he apparently intends for the occasion with a tentative campaign style.

Deus immediate political proposal appealed to delegates pledged to Mr. of the uncommitted—ved that reform of the l selection procedure gives more voice in the ng overdue. The Ford on to the Reagan prarily strategic: After Mr. Ford himself encept.

forces were unable to rity for the proposal large part because the Mississippi delegation us to adhere to its unit l 30 of its votes against the rule change. Word of the Mississippi decision apparently caused supporters of the proposal in other delegations to change their minds. Once the proposal had been voted down, the Reagan camp virtually conceded defeat. When the roll call was taken Wednesday night, Mr. Ford had 1,187 votes, 57 more than a majority, and Mr. Reagan 1,070.

Although the Reagan challenge had failed to wrest the nomination from the incumbent, it had succeeded, on a secondary level, in doing what many of its partisans had hoped it would, move President Ford and the Republican Party as a whole even further to the right than Mr. Ford's own conservative instincts might have dictated. The party platform, as Mr. Reagan said, embodied "in bold unmistakable colors with no pastel shades" most of the positions he had espoused in his campaign.

The extent of the President's deference to Mr. Reagan on platform issues was demonstrated during the convention by the Ford decision to accept a conservatively worded amendment that implicitly criticized the President and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger for their handling of relations with the Soviet Union; the President's camp was unwilling to risk a floor fight on the amendment that might provoke the ideological zeal of the Reaganites.

An Acceptable Choice For Running Mate

Similar deference to the Reagan wing was shown in Mr. Ford's selection of a vice-president nominee. Last year Vice President Rockefeller eliminated himself as a running mate in order, he said, to help Mr. Ford for the coming Reagan challenge; last week, to ensure that the defeated Reaganites remained loyal to the party, Mr. Ford selected as his running mate a conservative, Senator Robert J. Dole of Kansas, whom Mr. Reagan had endorsed. Senator Dole's presence on the ticket is unlikely to broaden its appeal to Democratic and independent voters, nor does the Kansas, as a fellow Midwesterner, add geographical balance.

Mr. Dole also adds little to the President's capacity to defend himself on the Watergate issue. The proceedings at the Democratic convention indicated that it would be a major issue in the campaign, albeit couched in terms of honesty and integrity in government. The Republicans demonstrated an acute sensitivity to the issue during their convention by conspicuously refraining from any reference to Richard Nixon, the party's standard bearer in three of the previous four elections.

Mr. Ford as President Nixon's appointed successor and pardoner is particularly vulnerable, and Senator Dole, a prominent defender of Mr. Nixon during most of the Watergate affair, is hardly in a position to help deflect the likely Democratic attack.

Mr. Dole does, however, bring Mr. Ford several advantages. He is a former chairman of the Republican National Committee, and he is known by and evidently acceptable to all segments of the party.

Most important, Mr. Dole brings to Mr. Ford's side an aptitude for political invective and a trenchant, witty speaking style. Mr. Ford will need such talents, for, as his uncharacteristically aggressive acceptance speech signaled, the President evidently intends to mount an offensive rather than defensive campaign against Mr. Carter, stressing what he considers to be the achievements of his administration: lowering of inflation, the absence of war, the restoration of confidence in government, opposition to large congressional spending programs.

As part of this offensive strategy, Mr. Ford has agreed to debate his opponent. Incumbents have invariably declined to abandon their olympian position for a debate, preferring to campaign by acting "Presidential" or manipulating Government policy for political advantage.

The necessity of an offensive posture was evidently suggested to the Ford advisers by the President's unusually low standing, compared with Mr. Carter, in most opinion surveys. Mr. Ford acknowledged the Republican's underdog status when he said in his acceptance speech that "the only polls that count are the polls the American people go to on Nov. 2."

Mr. Ford's success at the polls will probably depend to a large extent on whether the demonstration of unity at the convention translates itself into unity among the Republican electorate at large. The emotional demonstrations for Mr. Reagan, even after he had lost the nomination, indicated that many of his supporters may not have reconciled themselves wholeheartedly to a Ford candidacy.

The President, after accepting the nomination, summoned Mr. Reagan from the convention galleries to share the podium. Mr. Reagan spoke briefly, giving not so much a personal endorsement of the President as a call for Reaganites to fight hard for the party platform. Mr. Reagan is evidently prepared to campaign personally for Mr. Ford in those states, like Texas, where his presence would be advantageous.

The creation of the so-called demilitarized zone between North and South Korea at the end of the Korean war in 1953 brought a kind of peace to the country. But the zone has been neither demilitarized nor peaceful; there has been constant tension, frequent violence, and sometimes death. Last week, two American soldiers, part of the United Nations security force there, died in a fight with North Korean troops.

As a result of the incident, American and North Korean forces were put on "alert" and the carrier Midway and the contingent of destroyers, cruisers and frigates that normally accompany her left Tokyo in the direction of Korea. This show of force was accompanied by strong language by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger. He called the killings a "premeditated act of murder" and said that the United States was demanding "explanations and reparation" from North Korea. Mr. Kissinger did not say precisely what he expected or what America's response would be if North Korea ignored his demands. A high State Department official, however, said on Friday: "I would not rule out military force."

How the conflict began is not known. As has always been the case when trouble has erupted, each side has blamed the other.

What has been reported is that a party of six American guards, four South Korean guards and five South Korean civilian workers were pruning the branches of a bushy tree that hampered the vision of one of their observation posts at Panmunjom. A group of about 30 North Korean soldiers, according to officials of the United Nations command, objected to the pruning and in the resulting fight two United States Army officers, Capt. Arthur G. Bonifas and First Lieut. Mark T. Barrett, were killed, probably with their own pruning axes. There were also reports that three North Koreans were killed in the battle, but they could not be confirmed.

More than 1,000 people have died in such incidents since the Korean War ended; 49 of them have been Americans. The zone is jointly patrolled by North Koreans, Americans and South Koreans. The proximity between the former warring sides breeds constant expressions of animosity among the troops, from obscene gestures and words to fistfights, landmining and machine-gun ambushing.

Occasionally there are "negotiating" sessions in a special building at Panmunjom—which is something of a tourist attraction—but even these meetings often break down over petty matters such as the relative size of flags on the table, or the relative height of the chairs assigned to the negotiators.

Some of the Paths Are Easy, and Some Impassable

Now the Candidates Must Go In Search of the Electoral Votes

By R. W. APPLE JR.

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—Whatever else he did with his selection of Senator Robert J. Dole of Kansas, President Ford said a good deal about the sort of campaign he intends to conduct this fall. Republican professionals had been saying all week that the choice would be full of signals, and it was.

The probability, for example, is that Mr. Ford will use Mr. Dole as a political point man, spending four or five days a week in the White House and letting the Kansan, a renowned alley fighter, carry much of the campaign burden. Likewise, the probability is that the Ford-Dole ticket will try to rife Jimmy Carter, the Democratic nominee, and force him into some kind of major misstep.

But the most fateful signal was the one sent to the South, the region of the greatest Republican growth over the last two decades, and the region where the Republican Party of Richard M. Nixon once hoped to base its emerging new majority.

The South, of course, is Jimmy Carter's home, so even before the selection of Mr. Dole he was conceded a large advantage there. But there appeared to be a good possibility that the conservative President, if reinforced by someone of special appeal to Southerners (like Ronald Reagan or former Gov. John B. Connally of Texas or Anne Armstrong, United States Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, all of whom were on Mr. Ford's list) could hold his own in states such as Florida, Texas and Virginia.

But Mr. Ford chose a Farm Belt Senator unknown in the South, a conservative of the older, more pragmatic school rather than of the newer, more rigorous persuasion of a Reagan or a Helms. Ominously for the President, the choice produced a chorus of dismay among the Southern delegates. "A Dole?" asked Tom Ellis of North Carolina in a scathing tone. "What's that? A pineapple?" On the usually routine Vice Presidential roll-call, Mr. Dole lost more than 300 votes, most of them from the South.

Perhaps Mr. Ford can hold Mr. Carter off in Florida, a state whose tremendous influx of midwesterners has made its voting patterns differ to some degree from the rest of the South. But in the region's other nine states, the Georgian must be considered a prohibitive favorite. Those nine cast 107 electoral votes—a stunning 40 percent of the 270 needed for victory. To turn the numbers another way, the better to understand the extraordinary growth of the South's political power, President Ford will need to get almost two-thirds of the electoral votes elsewhere to gain a majority.

Where could he find them? Begin by giving him Michigan, his home state, usually Democratic but probably proud enough of its first native-born President to vote for him in November. Add Ohio, a demographically Democratic state, one that often breaks the hearts of Democratic candidates, such as John F. Kennedy in 1960. Add Indiana, one of the nation's most Republican states and certainly the most Republican in the industrial Midwest.

Those three states yield a base of 57 votes that Mr. Ford and Mr. Dole must carry if they are to have any chance of success. To it, Mr. Dole would hope to add most of the farm states—such as Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska—where his agricultural expertise and small-town Kansas roots should help. There and in some of the more conservative mountain states, Republicans should be able to pull enough electoral votes to increase their base to 90. Then throw in Florida, with 17 votes and that, by happy coincidence, gives Mr. Ford a base of 107 to match Mr. Carter's. All of this, obviously, is giving the President the benefit of every doubt. The significant point is that even so, Mr. Carter appears to hold a solid advantage in the rest of the country, with the other 311 votes.

The key areas—those places where Mr. Ford and Mr. Dole will have to concentrate if they hope to score an upset—are the Northeast and California. At the moment, the outlook does not appear good, even though Mr. Carter was not particularly strong in those areas during the primaries.

Massachusetts is barren ground for Republicans in their best years; it voted for George McGovern in 1972. New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, which constitute a Middle Atlantic strip with 85 votes, all have substantial ethnic populations, largely Roman Catholic, that Mr. Ford had hoped to win over because of a rather pervasive Catholic suspicion of Southerners and especially of Baptists.

In such an enterprise, William D. Ruckelshaus, a former deputy attorney general who was one of the victims of the Saturday night massacre, would have helped, and so would a few moderate platform planks. John Connally would have been a disaster. Mr. Dole is somewhere in-between. That he is divorced and remarried will certainly hurt; perhaps he will attempt to compensate for that with an assault on abortion, a tactic that helped him salvage his Senate seat after a brutal campaign in Kansas in 1974.

But the fact is that Mr. Ford has implicitly rejected the "Catholic strategy" pressed upon him by some of his advisers, and, barring any great upheaval abroad or other unexpected development, Mr. Carter ought to do quite nicely in New York and its somewhat smaller neighbors.

That leaves California, where the Carter campaign is reported to be undergoing organizational trauma. In part because of the ambivalent performance of Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. Nonetheless, the most recent poll by the respected Mervin D. Field shows Mr. Carter well ahead of Mr. Ford, and only an unexpectedly vigorous intervention by Mr. Reagan on the President's behalf would seem likely to turn things around.

Count the other states with strong Carter potential—places like Illinois and Wisconsin and Minnesota, plus the border states—and an electoral vote total in the neighborhood of 375 to 400 does not seem beyond reach.

The President's advisers have made these same calculations. That was the reason they were so desperately anxious to placate Mr. Reagan, in the hope of getting some real help in California, and why they were willing to undertake the extraordinary gamble of live television debates between Mr. Ford and Mr. Carter.

The World

In Summary

New Voices Are Being Raised In South Africa

The level of protest by South Africa's black majority continues to rise. Last week three developments appear to have changed qualitatively the nature of the current confrontation:

(1) For the first time blacks attacked South African industrial plants; (2) also for the first time, South African "coloreds"—persons of mixed ancestry—staged a march to protest the country's apartheid policies and to support the ongoing demonstrations by blacks; and (3) South African industrial leaders joined white liberals in calling on the Government to re-think racial policies.

The Government continues to respond to the violence with strong police repression. In the past two weeks, more than 60 blacks have been killed in the unrest in black townships—at least 253 have died since the upheaval, affecting more than 70 townships, began two months ago. But last week's attack's by blacks on four industrial plants in the coastal city of Port Elizabeth struck at the heart of South Africa's strength—its industry. All four plants rely heavily on black labor and the possibility that labor might revolt against Pretoria's employment practices, in which most blacks are restricted to unskilled jobs at subsistence wages, could have serious implications. Previous demonstrations by blacks have been aimed at Government buildings, usually schools or administrative offices inside black townships. Thirty-three blacks were killed, many by police automatic weapons, during the Port Elizabeth rioting.

The demands for change by white industrial leaders were not in direct response to the attack on the plants, but to the unrest in general. In a memorandum to the Government the Transvaal Chamber of Industries, which represents many of the largest firms in the country, urged that Pretoria should, as a priority, seek the allegiance of the black middle class by treating it with "dignity and self-respect," and by paying adequate wages.

Friday Pretoria slightly liberalized the land ownership restrictions for blacks, but strongly reaffirmed its rejection of any fundamental change in racial policy.

The demonstration by about 700 young "coloreds" in Cape Town protested the trial of 10 students who were arrested during disturbances there two weeks ago.

The riots have seriously hampered South Africa's recent attempts to improve its international reputation. Another difficulty has been Pretoria's unwillingness to give independence to its territory of South-West Africa, as mandated by the United Nations. Last week a Constitutional Conference in South-West Africa announced plans for independence by Dec. 31, 1978, but the plans are unlikely to reduce pressure on South Africa. The plans have already been rejected by the South West Africa People's Organization, the largest political group in the country, which Pretoria banned from the talks, and by the United Nations Council for Namibia—as South-West Africa is also called.

The P.L.O. Now Must Worry About Survival

The Palestine Liberation Organization and its Moslem and leftist allies are seeking recruits for a major battle they see coming to retain positions they now occupy in the mountains to the east of Beirut. What is at stake in this recruiting drive and in the continuing fighting is the existence of the Palestinian guerrilla movement itself, and whether it can survive the Lebanese conflict. This situation is a far cry from less than a year ago, when Palestinians' leader Yasser Arafat was viewed by many, even in the West, as a legitimate leader and international diplomat and when pressure was growing on Israel to reverse its opposition to negotiations at which the Palestinians were present.

Lebanon presents the only remaining base from which the Palestinian guerrillas feel they can effectively operate against Israel. They were driven out of their bases in Jordan in 1970 and 1971. But their total fighting strength in Lebanon is now about 28,000; of this figure, 25,000 are Lebanese Palestinians, 3,000 are leftist-Moslems from other nations. Half of the 25,000 deaths in the Lebanese civil war have been Palestinians.

This army faces a Syrian force of about 20,000 and about 25,000 Christian soldiers. And last week Syria threatened to use its full force to end the war if a negotiated settlement is not reached by Sept. 15. Further decimation of the Palestinian fighting men in Lebanon would jeopardize their entire movement.

Leaders of the Palestinian guerrillas believe that Syria's main reason for intervening in Lebanon was to weaken the guerrillas and to drive them out of Lebanon. That would permit a less militant Palestinian faction to assume leadership and to negotiate an overall Arab-Israeli settlement. The increasing partitioning of Lebanon has, in effect, placed the Palestinians and their allies in a cul de sac in the southwest section of the country; a loss of their mountaintop enclaves east of Beirut would further the partitioning, and further weaken the guerrillas' overall position.

The Nonaligned Say It Again

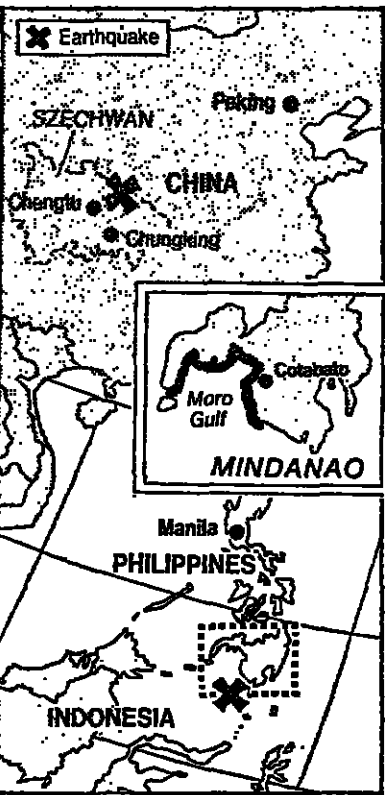

Eighty-five countries, members of the so-called nonaligned bloc, met for four days in Sri Lanka last week. The main point of the meeting seems to have been to restate for themselves and the rest of the world certain well-established political and economic ideas—that the developed countries must help to close the economic gap between rich and poor, and that most developing countries tend to be leftist or socialist, and strongly anti-American.

The resolutions of the conference itself will have little effect; they are nonbinding and decisions are by consensus, not by votes representing the nations' formal governmental positions. But in calling for new economic order, in proposing an oil embargo against France and Israel for their arms deals with South Africa, in cheering Vietnam's victory against "American aggression," and in condemning the American presence in Korea, the nonaligned countries reinforced a convergence of views that have real impact in such international forums as the United Nations, the Organization of American States, or the North-South conference in Paris.

This convergence of views leads to an almost unavoidable conclusion that the nonaligned bloc is rapidly becoming an alignment.

Mindanao Is Devastated

Movement between two great sections of the earth's crust—the Indian and Pacific continental plates—has once again brought earthquakes, tidal waves and devastation to Asia. Last week the Philippine island of Mindanao was hit with a major earthquake and tidal waves; 3,200 are known to have died and about 3,000 more are missing and feared dead. About 150,000 have been left homeless.

Where the earthquakes were centered (marked by X's) in China and the Philippines, and the coastline of Mindanao where the tidal waves struck (inset).

A major quake struck central China the same day, 95 miles north of the city of Chengtu in Szechwan Province. The area is sparsely populated and there were no reports—the Chinese Government seldom discloses such figures—of damage or casualties. The next day, Tuesday, a moderate quake struck Japan's Honshu Island on the Pacific coast; there apparently were no injuries.

The region of Asia in which all three earthquakes occurred has often been the scene of major tremors. Three weeks ago a major quake of 8.2 on the Richter scale and a secondary tremor of 7.9 struck the densely populated areas around Tangshan, 90 miles north of Peking.

The cause of earthquakes in that part of the world is probably the force of the continental plates pressing the region from the east and southwest. Moro Gulf, where the Philippine disaster was centered, is about 250 miles west of the Philippine Trench. Earth scientists believe the trench is where the Pacific Ocean floor is sliding into the earth's interior under the Philippine Islands. The Chinese earthquake was in a part of Asia where the earth's crust seems to be giving way in response to pressures from the Pacific Ocean and from the Indian sub-continent.

The enormous power of these subtle movements of the earth's crust were illustrated graphically in Mindanao. Entire seacoast villages—fishing and farming communities—were swept away by three 18-foot tidal waves that followed the earthquakes; in the town of Cotabato earth-moving equipment was pulled into the sea.

As Expected, Tanaka Indicted

Kakuei Tanaka, Japan's former Prime Minister, has been indicted for allegedly accepting $1.6 million in bribes to help sell Lockheed aircraft to a Japanese airline. The indictment was expected; Mr. Tanaka was arrested on July 27 for crimes that were then unspecified but were widely reported as being related to the Lockheed scandal. The Tanaka affair is expected to have deep political repercussions in Japan, but it is still not clear what form or direction those repercussions will take.

Mr. Tanaka has been a powerful figure in the Liberal-Democratic Party that has ruled Japan since the end of World War II. The political faction he led now appears to be disintegrating. Legislative elections are scheduled for December, and popular resentment over the Lockheed scandal and previous scandals involving leaders of the party have led to fears that the Liberal Democrats might lose their minority. No other party appears ready to assume leadership.

The Liberal Democrats, now led by Prime Minister Takeo Miki, have been meeting for a week to discuss their situation in the light of the Lockheed scandal.

Eighteen persons have been arrested in the scandal so far. Many of them are prominent in the party, including a former Transportation Minister, Tomisaburo Hashimoto, who was arrested yesterday for allegedly receiving a bribe of $16,000.

Although the party's meetings have not addressed specific reform yet, Mr. Miki reportedly advocates at least three major political reforms: (1) dismantling the overwhelming influence of the party's many factions; (2) changing political funds, raising with more funds directed to the party body and less to individual factions which then use the money to barter for power and position within the party, and (3) broadening the electorate which selects the party President who, in turn, becomes the Prime Minister. At present only party members of Parliament can participate in the selection.

But Mr. Miki's leadership of the party is itself now in question. Many Liberal-Democrats are seeking to remove him because he allowed the investigations of the Lockheed scandal to reach so high up into the party leadership. Mr. Miki has survived in part because he has confused his opponents by appealing over their heads to a new political force in Japan: public opinion.

Argentina, Ever Violent

Forty-six Argentines have been killed in two massacres apparently conducted by right-wing extremists against suspected left-wing guerrillas. As is becoming the grisly custom in Argentina, "retaliation" was given as the motive: 24 hours before the massacre, a right-wing general, Gen. Omar Actis, a former president of the Argentine state oil company was slain, apparently by leftists. The ongoing terror and counterterror, left and right, have again raised questions about the ability of Argentina's military junta to bring political stability to the country and to reverse its economic decline.

The military regime of Lieut. Gen. Jorge Rafael Videla, who took over last March from President Isabel Martinez de Peron, has promised to address both matters.

The Videla junta has made some headway in improving the economy, but what has been called the "long nightmare" of terrorism has continued unabated—about 500 people have died in acts of political assassination since March.

The economy. In 1973, Argentina had the highest living standards and one of the healthiest economies in Latin America. By last March foreign investments had declined, inflation had risen to 200 percent. The high prices brought about hoarding and, inevitably, a black market. Foreign investments declined and the country's balance-of-payments deficit grew precipitously.

The Videla regime has clamped down on black market sales, reduced inflation somewhat and improved Argentina's foreign investment position. Still, it is estimated that it will take a decade for Argentina to return to its 1973 living standards. The Government's concern during this rebuilding period is that the economic troubles will swell the ranks of left-wing guerrillas seeking its overthrow.

The terrorism. General Videla has said that he considers annihilation of the leftist guerrillas the top priority of his Government. He has embarked on a campaign which has been only partly successful. About 5,000 leftists have been arrested.

His Government has not, however, shown the same enthusiasm for rooting out right-wing extremists. They are known to have close ties with the country's military and police organizations, they frequently use police department credentials to abduct their targets, and they are almost never arrested.

Partition in Lebanon Is Now Nearly

By IHSAN A. HIJAZI

BEIRUT, Lebanon—A statement made recently by Pierre Gemayel, the leader of the Phalange Party, Lebanon's largest Christian politico-military organization, seriously raised the question of partitioning the country between the Moslems and Christians, after 16 months of civil war.

Mr. Gemayel made his statement only 24 hours after Christian rightwing forces captured the Palestinian camp of Tell Zaatar and thus cleared the last Palestinian and Moslem islet at the southeastern outskirts of Beirut where the so-called "Christian enclave" begins.

For many months now, a de facto partition between Moslem and Christian areas has existed. Recent military successes by the rightwing Christians contributed to defining the lines of partition even further. Since June, when 20,000 Syrian forces entered Lebanon and tipped the military scales in favor of the Christians, rightwing forces have occupied all the northern district of Al Koura overlooking the coast all the way north to the southern approaches of the Moslem port of Tripoli. The fall of Tell Zaatar, the nearby Palestinian camp of Jisr al-Pasha and the adjacent Moslem quarter of Al Nabaa gave the Christians control over an area stretching from the southeastern suburbs of the capital all the way to Bohsas at Tripoli's outskirts, and from the Mediterranean in the west to the Cedars of Lebanon in the northeastern hilltops.

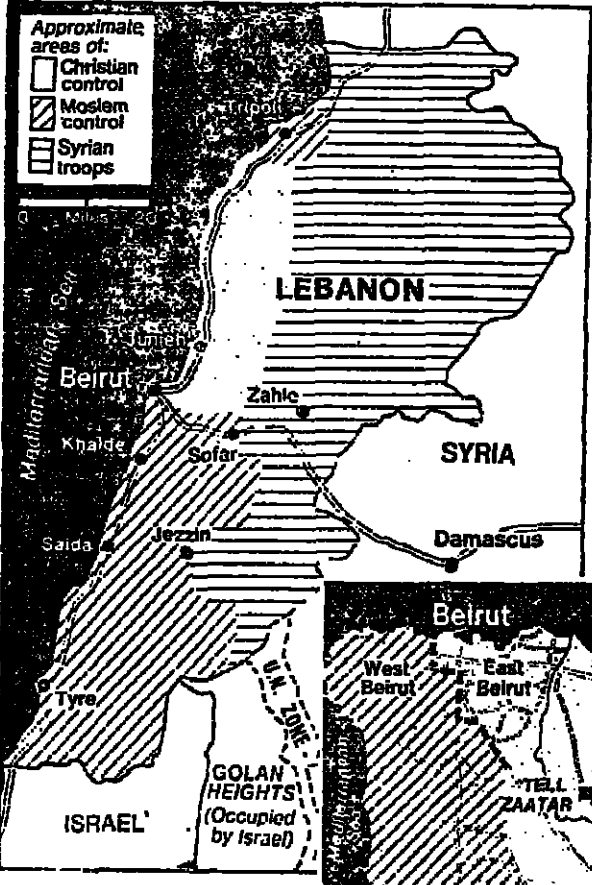

Mr. Gemayel has said the proposed decentralization system will head off complete partition, but Moslem and leftist Lebanese leaders do not see it that way. They have accused Mr. Gemayel of trying to establish a "Christian homeland" in a section of Lebanese territory in the same way the Jews had founded their homeland in Palestine.

There are several possible interpretations of Mr. Gemayel's proposal:

(1) The Phalange leader, in effect proposing a substitute for the old Lebanese system of Christian-Moslem integration, in practice since the country gained independence in 1943.

(2) In demanding a separate education for Christians; and for Christian areas to be free of Palestinian presence and of influence by the surrounding Arab and Islamic heritage, Mr. Gemayel wants to insulate the Christian community against Arab surroundings and inter-Arab troubles.

About one million Lebanese have left the country since the crisis began, so it is difficult to give precise estimates

Japanese Now Noticing Air Scandals

By ANDREW H. MALCOLM

As stylized a performance as any Kabuki ever was. Daily, the television cameras care in color the comings and goings of the elderly leaders enter the room in the suits and stride to their appointed overstuffed chairs with white linen. There, they sit in gripping the armrests like lions in front of and silently make small talk while the cameras in and the commentator describes the latest setting on the confused political situation that former Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka was last week formally charged—for alleged in the Lockheed aircraft bribery scandal.

It has a new element. For the first time since World War II, public opinion is playing an important part in the politics of this island nation. The impact is bound to have serious on the party that has ruled America's chief more than 21 years.

According to staff members of the Japanese Diet, there is more concern among members "of outside dealings, relationships and here are virtually unanimous appeals from civil and civil leaders for sweeping reforms in finances, fundraising and leadership selection

A serious discussion of abolishing or modified political factions, those feudal groupings vidual leader that form the rusty organization of the conservative Liberal-Democratic Party is a popular move, according to recent newspaper's generally conservative electorate has been cynical over the years and the current to have fed that feeling. There are many lar dissatisfaction may finally have reached int, and the reactions have been directed iticians, who now vow reforms.

It is cheap, but the politicians must face the mal elections for the lower house before Given the climate of reform in Japan, few al procedures for handling scandal will be ime, especially since the Japanese feel the ng their investigations so closely.

The scandal-handling procedure is to uncover miscreants whose interminable trials drag out anymore and the whole affair is forgotten. bureaucratic scandals, usually involving seen a frequent feature of postwar life in Japan. Coal mine operators sought to thwart nationalization with bribes in 1948, the same year of the scandal over illegal Government loans to private companies. In 1954 illegal loans and bribes touched off a shipbuilding scandal. In 1961 it was a railway company. And now it is a foreign aircraft firm.

The reason for such corruption is largely structural. Before the war Japanese politicians usually were wealthy men for whom bribes were unnecessary. But a new generation of less affluent politicians emerged after the war. Some of them took advantage of the postwar chaos and confusion to sell favors and privileges to business interests.

With this money they developed personal political factions whose members were drawn not by policy affinities but by personal allegiance to a leader who thus shouldered much of the heavy financial burden that came with Diet membership. The party contributed little money and individual constituents virtually nothing.

The leader paid for his faction members' political postcard mailings to the home district, for his extra staff members, for the envelopes of cash that are required at constituents' weddings or the wreaths for the funerals. The leader introduced faction members to corporate friends who might legally provide substantial financial support; the conflict of interest potential is obvious for a Diet member voting regularly on measures such as corporate taxes, railway fares, or antimonopoly laws.

Even when prosecutors gathered incriminating evidence against high-ranking politicians, they were held back by their political bosses. For instance, when the arrest of Eisaku Sato was imminent in the 1954 shipbuilding scandal, Prime Minister Shigeru Yoshida, his political godfather, called a halt to the proceedings.

Mr. Sato went on to win the Prime Ministership as well as the Nobel Peace Prize.

The Prime Minister's protection had become so much a part of politics here that last week Takeo Kimura, a Tanaka ally, publicly attacked Mr. Miki for breach of faith in letting justice take its course.

The Power of Public Opinion

But Mr. Miki, who heads only a minor faction, had his eye on a new political force in Japan—public opinion. Recent polls show his support growing there if nowhere else.

Mr. Miki could still be ousted in the continuing factional infighting, or if one of his own political allies is implicated in the Lockheed affair. And Mr. Miki also faces a revolt among younger conservative members unsatisfied with the pace of reform.

Ironically, the Liberal-Democratic Party could be the chief beneficiary of its own scandal. With opposition parties in constant disarray, there is little alternative to the Liberal-Democrats this year have won nearly 80 percent of his pledge of a thorough investigation. In the midst of the country's and party's worst scandal in postwar history, the Liberal Democrats this year have won nearly 80 percent of the nation's 57 mayoral elections, including four city hall posts previously held by opposition parties.

If Mr. Miki could use the Lockheed scandal as ammunition to push through substantive party reforms, he might well ride a wave of public opinion into a stronger leadership position and give his own party a new lease on life.

Few people here are willing to bet that will happen. Mr. Miki is not an aggressive leader. His weak political position within the party does not augur well for his future as Prime Minister. But unlike a few months or even weeks ago, few people are willing to bet against the remarkably astute and lucky Mr. Miki either.

"We're moving into a whole new ballgame," said one diplomat, "and the rules haven't been written yet."

Nonaligned Nations Have Come A Long Way Since Bandung

By WILLIAM BORDERS

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka—On a gleaming marble wall in the $4 million auditorium that this little island republic built for the meeting of nonaligned countries that just ended, the Government has proudly posted a huge world map showing the strength of the nonaligned movement.

Its bright colors depicting member-nations and sympathetic observers, cover almost all the southern half of the world, spreading across South America and Africa, through the Arabian Peninsula. One-third of the world's people and two-thirds of its nations are represented, a startling reminder of how nonalignment, and the world in general, have changed in the 21 years since its founders met in the Indonesian resort city of Bandung to give common voice to their concern over "the danger of an atomic war."

Barely two dozen nations then, in a world that was still largely colonized, they were seeking a middle course between domination by the Soviet Union and domination by the United States.

"The only way to achieve peace is to extend the climate of peace, and to prevent the cold war spreading into other parts of the world," explained Jawaharlal Nehru, one of the earliest apostles of nonalignment. The concern was not entirely altruistic. As Tanzania's President, Julius K. Nyerere, is fond of saying, quoting an old African proverb, "When two elephants fight, it is the grass that suffers." But now, as one head of government after another pointed out in speeches last week, the cold war tensions that gave birth to nonalignment seem to have lessened. "Our persistent refusal to be drawn into the confrontations of the cold war has made a significant contribution to the easing of international tension," declared Sri Lanka's Prime Minister, Sirmavo Bandaranaike. And most of the nonaligned movement's other political goals, namely dismantling of the old European empires, have been achieved.

What, then, is the place of the nonaligned movement in a world so different? To many of the delegates, who included several dozen heads of state or government, the time has come to change the focus of whatever kind of loose club this is from the political to the economic.

The shift from political issues to economic ones has been subtle, a question of emphasis and tone. Even the first conference, in Bandung in 1955, when only 29 African and Asian nations attended, called for stabilization of the prices of commodities and less economic exploitation by the big powers. And in the fourth conference, in Lusaka, Zambia in 1970, the 53 nations represented endorsed resolutions calling for debt relief and a greater share in making decisions in the world's economic institutions. In the other conferences—in Belgrade in 1961, Cairo in 1964, Algiers in 1973 and Lima last year—the nonaligned nations endorsed nationalization of natural resources by developing countries and a closing of the economic gap between the rich and poor countries of the world.

The most obvious shift toward economic issues has been in a new awareness among developing countries of the value of their natural resources, so badly needed by the industrialized Western world. The nations represented here include most of the members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, and the significance of that group's success in raising the price of oil is not lost on the countries that produce other essential commodities. Members of the nonaligned movement produce two-thirds of the world's cocoa and rubber, for example, and half of its tin and bauxite.

But, quite apart from its potential for pricefixing cartels, the movement still regards itself as "the conscience of the world, its moral spirit."

In that tradition, there were some leaders on this lush tropical island last week who hoped that they might persuade the rich nations that the economic disparity between the northern and southern hemispheres must be lessened simply because it is not fair.

As the nonaligned movement changes direction, a few of its members are asking themselves the question that many Americans have traditionally asked about it: How nonaligned can a movement be when its members include North Korea, Cuba and the new governments of Vietnam and Cambodia, and its speeches and resolutions so often attack Western imperialism and ignore the Russian kind?

A Moderating Influence

In a speech that marked a sharp deviation from the tone of most of last week's sea of rhetoric, Singapore's Prime Minister, Lee Kuan Yew, expressed his concern about the movement's uncritical attitude towards Communism this way: "The question I asked myself, as I read through the draft resolutions submitted to this conference was: Who am I uniting with, and for what objectives and purposes, and against whom?"

The next nonaligned conference, three years from now, is to be held in Havana. As was proved by the moderating influence that Prime Minister Bandaranaike exercised on this conference, who the host is can make a difference.

"It would be a real loss if they stopped being even as nonaligned as they are, said a European diplomat, voicing a concern that also was evident in the close attention that diplomats of the big Eastern and Western countries were paying to what went on in Colombo.

The other evening, during a break in the speech-making, that expression of concern was recounted to an African delegate. He thought a minute, took a sip of the fine Ceylon tea that was in evidence everywhere at the conference, and replied:

"They don't need to worry. We are nonaligned and non-aligned we remain. We talk and talk forever—palaver we call it at home—and much of the talk is harsh. But what harm do we do by talking? And, more importantly, who's to say how the world might be today if the non-aligned movement did not exist?"

The challenger, who is also a conservative, made an issue of Mr. Passman's integrity. He criticized the Congressman for accepting a Congressional mileage allowance for car travel while traveling more cheaply by air; Mr. Passman returned the excess allowance during the campaign. The Representative's integrity had already been called into question in another context: the Agriculture Department has been investigating allegations that Mr. Passman used his chairmanship of a House Appropriations subcommittee to coerce foreign aid recipients to hire a shipping agency that he favored.

In another primary election last week, Lieut. Gov. James B. Hunt of North Carolina beat three opponents for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination. Mr. Hunt is considered to have a good chance of defeating the Republican nominee, David T. Flaherty, and retaining the governorship for the Democrats. The state's Republican governor, James E. Holshouser Jr., is prohibited by state law from succeeding himself.

Mr. Holshouser was elected in 1972, when Richard Nixon carried the state by a wide majority. In North Carolina as in other Southern states, Republicans are worried that the electoral coattails of the Democratic Presidential nominee Jimmy Carter, a Southerner himself, will help local Democratic candidates capture some of the relatively few offices now held by Republicans.

Some F.B.I. Men Had Orders

Former senior officials of the Federal Bureau of Investigation have provided the first public statements about how far up the bureau's chain of command the knowledge and approval of field agents' use of break-ins to gather evidence about domestic organizations traveled.

W. Mark Felt, a former associate director, who retired in 1973, has said that in 1972 he approved the commission of two such burglaries and that he did so on the assurance of L. Patrick Gray 3d, then acting director, that the practice would be countenanced. Edward S. Miller, former head of the Bureau's intelligence division, a section of which was responsible for the investigation of domestic radical and terrorists groups, has stated that Mr. Gray said he authorized the tactic.

The use of surreptitious entries as an investigatory tool was until recently believed to have stopped after J. Edgar Hoover ordered it stopped in 1966. Three months ago, it was disclosed that the Department of Justice was investigating the resumption of the tactic to gather evidence following Mr. Hoover's death in 1972. A number of bureau sources have characterized the agents who committed the break-ins as "renegades" operating without Washington's knowledge.

The Justice Department inquiry is centering on a number of burglaries in the New York City area in the last five years, and late last week F.B.I.

agents, acting under the direction of Justice Department prosecutors, raided the bureau's New York City field office and its Washington headquarters. They removed what one Federal official termed "the cabinet after file cabinet." Why the surprise raid was ordered is not known, though the prosecutors may have feared that crucial evidence might be destroyed.

The raid may also have been related to a new area of Justice Department inquiry: In the course of the burglary investigation, Justice prosecutors have uncovered a broader range of illegal activities, including mail thefts, and illegal wiretaps and bugs.

Mr. Gray has denied that he ever approved any illegal act. One of the burglaries Mr. Felt acknowledged was intended to uncover leads to the whereabouts of members of the Weather Underground, an American guerrilla group. But Mr. Gray reportedly has told friends that he had approved the other, a search of the Arab Information Center in Dallas for clues to the operation of Palestinian terrorists in the United States, believing it was legal because it involved a foreign espionage matter.

months of the year, the pace of economic growth is remaining steady, and inflation is remaining moderate.

These were last week's figures: Consumer prices rose by 0.5 percent in July, as they had in June, for a yearly rate of 5 to 6 percent. The increase reflected expected rises in the prices of gasoline, automobile insurance and medical care, but the most volatile component of the consumer price index, food prices, rose very little. The recent Agriculture Department forecast of good crops for this year means the all-over cost of food will continue to rise only gently.

Industrial production, generally regarded as a broad gauge of the economy, rose only 0.2 percent last month, the smallest increase in nine months. However, most analysts believe that the combination of a low rate of inflation and rising incomes will bring up retail sales and with them industrial production. Largely because of an increase in the average work week, wages rose faster than prices last month: Real spendable earnings for the average worker with three dependents were up 0.1 percent.

Housing starts declined 9 percent, to an annual rate of 1.387 million units, but again there was an offsetting factor. Building permits, an indicator of future starts, increased 6 percent, that rate now is the highest since the 1974-1975 recession.

The Republican's prescription for recovery has worked as planned, but its cost has been in unemployment. Over seven million people are still jobless.

The Themes That Emerged In Kansas City

By AL MARLENS

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—The leaders of the Republican Party who spoke from their rostrum in Kansas City were addressing not the delegates before them, who despite their contest for party power were already devoted to party gospel, but an electorate composed increasingly of political agnostics.

The language was neither impulsive nor entirely individualistic. Those who made set speeches to a national television audience had considered their words for days and weeks, and their words had been considered by President Ford's staff. Those words, adjusted downward for rhetorical inflation, probably provide a fairly reliable guide to how the Republican Phoenix, in the campaign that now formally begins, will try to rise from the ashes Richard Nixon left behind.

Here is what the Republicans seemed to be saying: They do not plan to show Jimmy Carter, the Democratic nominee, much love.

The Republicans used some strong language in their personal references—many more than is usual—to Mr. Carter. Some samples: Mr. Carter's idea of America is "swamped" (Senator Barry M. Goldwater); the Democratic National Convention, instead of nominating a strong leader, produced "peanuts" (Governor Christopher S. Bond of Missouri, in an otherwise moderate statement); "My record is one of specifics, not smiles" (President Ford).

They will run against Mr. Carter in large part by running against the Democratic Congress.

That is no surprise: Mr. Ford's vetoes of activist, expensive, Democratic legislation had clearly forecast it, and whenever the Republicans stopped long enough last week to consider the real enemy, they confirmed it. Damnation of Congress as the symbol of hated "big government," and Mr. Carter as the herald of its further growth, was a consistent major theme. Among the ways the Republicans made the connection:

"The issue . . . is this: How much government is too much government? . . . That is what the election this year is about and we won't let Jimmy Carter forget it" (Senator Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee); Mr. Carter won in primaries by "ranting against Washington . . . but his own party members in the Congress are the architects . . . of the things he has denounced" (Senator Goldwater); "Washington is not the problem . . . Congress is the problem" (President Ford).

They will attack Congress for doing too much and trying to do even more, just as Harry S. Truman attacked the Republican Congress and, by association, a Republican Presidential candidate, for doing too little.

The Republicans obviously believe that this is the year when their perennial concern about big government will find a responsive electorate, and the reason for the belief is also obvious; this is the year of the politics of parsimony, when, for example, the near insolvency of New York City caused some Democratic officeholders to start talking, and even acting, like Republican fiscal conservatives. The irony of a frugal Republican President providing a loan (with interest) to keep Democratic New York from bankruptcy was not mentioned at the convention, but it very likely will be in the campaign.

For the Republicans, however, not just money is involved. If they follow the course they seemed to be setting last week, they will frame the issue roughly this way: Jimmy Carter, with the help of free-spending Democrats in Congress and despite what he says in the campaign, will create new bureaucracies, spend and waste more billions, tax unmercifully and, in the process, diminish individual initiative and individual freedom. These were a few of the many hints in Kansas City:

"All history tells us that to maximize government is to minimize human freedom" (Senator Dole). "Even a freely elected government can become an oppressive government. The common sense of Americans today is that Government taxes too much. It meddles too much; it interferes too much; it bullies too much" (Senator Baker).

And more: The Republicans must prevent "the Democrat dominated Congress from further weakening the rights of individuals and from continuing the tragic course of wasteful spending" (Gov. James B. Edwards of South Carolina); "You can't keep pumping out more Federal dollars than are coming in without a disaster. Gerry Ford had the intelligence and the courage to say 'No,' to use the veto" (Vice President Rockefeller, not normally viewed, by Republicans or Democrats, as a small spender); "It has been the Democratic Party . . . which has built the Federal bureaucracy ever larger . . . and directed the agents of that bureaucracy to penetrate ever deeper . . . into the conduct of all of this nation's private affairs and our personal lives" (Former Gov. John Connally of Texas).

It is likely that President Ford and especially his running mate, the tough campaigner Bob Dole, will consider a strong attack their best defense. Yet much that was said in Kansas City, directly and indirectly, seemed to be describing the defensive positions the Republicans must occupy as well. They will mention Watergate because the Democrats won't let them avoid it, but they will say they cleaned up their own mess, equate Democratic scandals in Congress with Watergate, and accuse the Democrats of a whitewash.

Senator Baker said: "We did not shy away from our duty . . . even though we knew that Watergate would be embarrassing, humiliating, and even potentially devastating . . . But since then, America has learned . . . about other political abuses in prior Democratic Administrations . . . and even in the present Democratic Congress, abuses of . . . the most shocking type . . . We faced ours . . . but we are still waiting for the Democrats to face theirs." President Ford said: "Two years ago people's confidence in their highest officials . . . had twice been shattered . . . I have demanded honesty, decency and personal integrity from everybody in the Executive Branch of the Government. The House and Senate have the same duty."

If the Republicans must suffer politically for the failures of Richard Nixon, then they will try to make the Democrats pay again for the Vietnam War.

The references were usually brief, but they were frequent.

Drawings by Eugene Milnes

Today, America is at peace" (President Ford). "It was a Republican Administration that got us out of the Vietnam debacle" (Vice President Rockefeller).

They will try to neutralize the political effect of high unemployment by pointing to lowered inflation. The Democrats are certain to make the condition of the economy a major issue. One Republican after another last week forecast the response: They will stress not high unemployment, which now affects almost seven-and-a-half million people, but the Ford Administration's success in lowering inflation, which affects everyone. Some typical references: "Two years ago inflation was 12 percent . . . Inflation has been cut in half" (President Ford); "The current Administration has worked to solve the problems of inflation . . ." (Governor Edwards of South Carolina).

There were also themes sounded in Kansas City that unintentionally silhouetted the problems posed for Mr. Ford that go beyond even the overwhelming one of the Nixon-Agnew legacy.

There was relatively little proposed that would be new or innovative to meet the problems of a highly urbanized society. Rather, there was an appeal for Republican "efficiency" (John Rhodes, Republican minority leader in the House) and "effective government" (Mr. Baker). Representative Jack Kemp of New York said at the start of a short speech that the issue is "What are we for?" and answered his question mainly with a litany of generalizations reflecting orthodox Republican principles.

Because he lived long and wrote well, Thomas Jefferson was quoted several times on the dangers of big government. Gov. Robert F. Bennett of Kansas, pointing out that, measured in office holders, there was no state more Republican, attributed his party's success to its adherence to the Jeffersonian shibboleth that the best government is the one that governs least.

Governor Bennett also noted, however, that in Kansas "the backbone of our economy is agriculture and the family farm." When Jefferson wrote, that was true of almost all America. It has not been true for most of it for a long time now.

Dole's Choice Virtue Is That He Fits Right

By WARREN WEAVER

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—In the hot bright Republican National Convention, it did not seem unusual that President Ford had picked Dole as his 1976 runningmate.

The Kansan, like the other possible choices: Relative obscurity, a lack of appeal in the Midwest, a reputation for nastiness. But his background, his personal partisanship and his ideological posture, probably into the Ford agenda for the fall combativeness. The Senator can do in between now and November; the President any case generally considered effective thus have the option of staying above things by acting Presidential.

In most other ways, however, the two than different. Like the President, Senator Dole is a middle Westerner who climbed to the top of his profession without the social credentials. They served together Representatives for eight years, a special ship upon which Mr. Ford has frequent executive appointments.

On his record, Mr. Dole was safe from the taint of the Reagan partisans, a sponsor. After all, the Senator had been of former President Nixon and had set record well into Watergate. When Sen. Dole the outspoken Dole an upstart, his chief Goldwater.

Dole is a cautious politician, and Mr. Ford did not present any of the major party liberal might have. He does not shadow the President as a powerful political ally. The Constant Courtship of the Uncommitted

By LINDA AMSTER

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—Of the 2,259 delegates who cast their votes for the Republican Presidential nomination, about 200 had taken their time before publicly and definitively declaring for either candidate. They were the uncommitted, and they were tracked and tallied by those trying to predict the nomination almost as passionately as they had been by Gerald Ford and Ronald Reagan.

Most of the uncommitted had never been in the national spotlight, and even fewer had ever attended a Republican National Convention. There were housewives and lawyers, retirees, farmers, and even a sheriff—Ted T. Barr of Huntington, W. Va. There were no accountants.

Between mid-June and Wednesday night, what began with a formal questionnaire had given way to informal chat. Telephone friendships formed as delegates talked about political courtships. Farmers confided that Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz had called. Businessmen spoke of conversations with William E. Simon, Secretary of the Treasury. And, of course, many delegates told of personal attention from the candidates themselves.

"Here I am, a young lawyer," exclaimed Thomas H. Bruinooge of Allendale, New Jersey, after a visit to the White House. "Imagine! I spent half an hour in the Blue Room with the President. I asked the President a question and eyeballed him while he answered. He didn't waver. I was impressed."

But he was apparently more impressed with Ronald Reagan, for whom he cast his vote. When the former Governor of California called him, Mr. Bruinooge recalled, "My wife answered the phone and came into the kitchen to get me. She said, 'It's Ronald,' and my 6-year-old got all excited, thinking Ronald McDonald was on the line."

Like most delegates, Sam Kelly, of Rawlins, Wyo., struggled with what he saw as essentially a contest between issues and electability. "I'm philosophically for Reagan," he explained, "but electologically for Ford." In the end, he cast a pragmatic vote for the President.

While the uncommitted were reticent about disclosing their Presidential preferences, some were less than discreet on other topics. A Pennsylvania delegate alerted an interviewer on July 26 that an announcement would be made later that day concerning someone from his delegation. Within hours, Ronald Reagan named as his running mate Senator Richard Schweiker, who was indeed a Pennsylvania delegate.

Another delegate said she had decided in favor of Mr. Reagan because of her opposition to welfare. Even though she was an unwed mother, she volunteered, she had put herself through college and secured a good job.

When the polling operation moved to Kansas City, the weather became the first topic of telephone conversation. Interviewers advised delegates about the city's heat wave, hoping that in a friendly conversational climate, they might get a hint about which way the delegates were going. Among those particularly grateful for the weather report was Mrs. LaDemna Zuback. "I'm glad you told me how hot it is," she said from her home in Anchorage, Alaska, and then she went to shop for some lightweight clothes.

The weather meant something else to Donald Shide. The day before he was to leave Cathy, N.D., for the convention, he said, "I got up this morning and the sun was shining. I have to tend my crops." So his alternate, Wesley Beiter, found himself at the convention, casting a vote for the President.

The plans of a handful of other uncommitted delegates also changed suddenly. Ron Stearney of Chicago expected to be in Kansas City. But on a recount of Illinois's Seventh Congressional District, he was found to have lost to Gen. Robert M. Woodward. General Woodward was delighted to vote for Mr. Reagan.

The tally for each candidate did not include any delegates who were just leaning toward one or the other; the commitment had to be firm. But often an interviewer could sense which way a delegate would vote. Once, when pressed by a delegate, a pollster said she thought the delegate would vote for Mr. Ford. "I won't say 'yes' and I won't say 'no,'" he countered. "But if you were in Las Vegas, I'd put my money on whatever you bet." He finally did vote for the President.

When the roll-call began on Wednesday night there were eight still uncommitted. One of those who held firm to the end was Mrs. Eliza Sprinkle, a 79-year-old grandmother of seven from Bristol, Va. She wasn't really uncommitted at all, she admitted afterward; she had made up her mind to vote for Mr. Reagan. But the pollsters had been so nice that she didn't want to show favoritism by telling one ahead of the others. And so she insisted to all that she had not decided.

State Notes Looking Better

The Region

Summary

Atlantic Oil Leases Draw Very High Bids

Further litigation notwithstanding, bidding for oil off the East Coast of the United States now seems all but certain. After months of delay, the first leases were sold last week for drilling off the Atlantic. Still further delay, however, is possible — even likely.

Drilling cannot begin until the environmental questions are reviewed.

Next month by the United States Court of Appeals. If the court approves the program, those opposed—New York State, Long Island communities and environmental groups—may still appeal to the Supreme Court, perhaps delaying the drilling for months.

The estimated riches of the field, which covers 876,750 acres of the Atlantic 60 miles south of Long Island and 47 to 90 miles east of New Jersey, may have surprised the Federal Government. It had expected to raise 400 million to $600 million in this initial sale. As a result of the bidding, 11 which 60 oil companies sought 101 tracts, the Government could realize as much as $1.1 billion. The oil companies based their value of the various tracts on geological and seismic surveys of the area, known as the Baltimore Canyon Trough.

The highest single bid, $107.7 million, was made by a consortium headed by the Mobil Corporation, the Sun Company and Getty Oil Company. The Exxon Corporation, the world's largest oil company, was the most active at the auction. It was high bidder on 34 tracts.

Washington has long favored the program as of major benefit in the nation's effort to increase its dwindling resources and reduce reliance on foreign oil. The Government also stands to gain financially. Aside from the revenue from the original leases, it would receive annual rent and a royalty of one-sixth of a company's income from the tract.

Many along the Eastern Seaboard believe the program could aid economically depressed communities and play a part in relieving high unemployment, especially in the construction industry. New coastal facilities would be required to receive the oil. It is also asserted by proponents of the exploration that the nearby production, expected to begin in three to five years, would reduce energy costs to the consumer.

Opponents are fearful of oil spills that would pollute beaches and resorts and seriously harm the fishing industry.

Violence Among The Teenagers

An unusual outbreak of crime and violence by bands of teenagers was reported in the New York metropolitan area last week. Much of the violence was apparently random, although in at least one case there is clear evidence of strong racial motivation.

There seems to be no "pattern" other than an apparent increase in crimes by youth gangs that law enforcement agencies say are bolder and better armed than in the past. New York City police report that arrests of gang members have dropped off this year because of personnel cutbacks in the unit monitoring the gangs. Large gatherings such as rock concerts seem often to set off the incidents of beatings, muggings and sexual attacks. Some officials see the violence as the inevitable result of idleness and cutbacks in summer recreation and job programs.

These are some of the recent incidents:

Staten Island—Two carloads of white youths brandishing knives, baseball bats, sticks and an ax vandalized the home of a black family in Staten Island's integrated middle class Willowbrook section, destroying furnishings and clothing. One of those charged said the break-in was in retaliation for an unreported beating of a white teenager by blacks.

Midtown Manhattan—On the same night as the Staten Island attack, 20 youths who had apparently been turned away from a discotheque contest went on a four-and-a-half-hour rampage of robbery, assault and vandalism. All those arrested were black, but they came from different neighborhoods (two gave addresses outside the city) and attacked both blacks and whites.

Brooklyn—On Monday night a score of white youths attacked four black teenagers in Brooklyn's integrated Midwood section after a fight outside a restaurant.

Earlier this month in Connecticut, the Hartford City Council canceled a series of rock concerts because of vandalism during and after the performances.

In New Jersey, the scene of much turmoil in the past, there have been no reports of a surge in teenage crime.

Other Cities, Too

Other cities around the country have also experienced serious trouble with gangs of teenagers.

In Detroit last week, a curfew for teenagers was imposed after several hundred youths and adults descended on a rock concert and systematically robbed and mugged members of the audience. One rape was reported. The incident was apparently planned by leaders of highly organized black street gangs that have been terrorizing the city's East Side. Their victims are usually white, but the attacks do not appear to be an expression of racial tension.

The violent outbreaks differ from the urban race riots of the 1960's and early 1970's, which were characterized primarily by sustained looting, arson and other property crimes, in that they usually involve beatings, muggings, rapes and shootings. The new violence seems to be for the sake of violence, itself.

A Disillusioned City Doctor

New York City's hospital system, like all its institutions, has been sharply affected by the city's financial difficulties. As a result, a number of young doctors who in the late 1960's came to the municipal hospitals, where they felt the need was greatest, have become disillusioned, convinced in some cases that efforts to keep patients alive are even in jeopardy.

Most of 30 physicians, for example, who started as interns at Lincoln Hospital in the South Bronx, have now left. They and others have charged that Lincoln, which has recently relocated in a new building, had a severe shortage of staff members and inadequate facilities that served to increase morbidity among patients and prolong recovery time. Dr. Richard Carlson, one of those who left, discussed his disillusionment last week with New York Times reporter Charlayne Hunter. An excerpt follows:

"It is a 'given' that patients die needlessly all the time," Dr. Carlson said. "When I have worked as medical chief resident, I have often taken people out of the intensive-care unit to die."

Dr. Carlson said there were only seven intensive-care beds in use, partly because of limited nursing staff, and partly because some of the beds were behind the nursing station and could not be observed.

"We usually do it by age; the oldest are taken out—with the hope that maybe they wouldn't die, but essentially to make room so that the younger may have a chance to live," he said.

Describing the case of a young girl suffering from seizures, who after five hours in the emergency room could still not be admitted until somebody died and freed a bed, Dr. Carlson said:

"I spent the whole night running back and forth asking if one comatose patient had died. And finally when he died, we gave the family a few minutes of grief. Then rushed them out to make room for the girl. That kind of powerlessness, I almost cried."

State Notes Looking Better

New York State has announced that a group of banks and financial institutions will buy $288.6 million of its notes. The sale holds special significance because the notes, now held by the state's Common Retirement Fund, could not be marketed to the public earlier in the year.

Why the renewed interest? State officials have made a concerted effort to convince investors that New York will not default. While the sale is a positive sign, it does not mean that New York's credit difficulties are over, just that they are gradually subsiding.

One indication that at least the members of the syndicate believe New York is slowly moving away from its fiscal trouble is they agreed to pay the retirement fund a small premium, which apparently reflects their conviction that investors will consider the notes, which carry a relatively high interest rate, an attractive and safe short-term investment. The rate was negotiated in April when the state's credit was its nadir.

The Strike Is Settled, but Money Problems Remain Very Real

How the Hospitals in N.Y. Got That Way

By H. JACK GEIGER

In New York City's huge network of hospitals, public and private alike, the color of red no longer suggests blood. Red is the color of ink.

The hospitals have now returned to normal (although the state revealed last week that it is going to delay opening of the city's new North Central Bronx Hospital) after weathering two major strikes within a month, but the labor settlements did not end the troubles. By the end of the year city officials must find new sources of revenue, cut costs of operating public hospitals or lay off as many as 3,000 workers.

"Normal" for all hospitals in the city means chronic and increasing deficits, constantly escalating costs and government funding—the major source of income for the entire system—that fails to keep pace, or even shrinks, as city and state governments, caught in their own fiscal difficulties, desperately try to reduce their health-care payments. The strikes themselves were not ordinary labor disputes, but reflections of the hospital system's economic troubles.

There are two major components of New York's hospitals resources: the private sector comprises 33 major nonprofit hospitals, the so-called "voluntary" institutions such as Columbia Presbyterian and Mount Sinai, with a total of more than 36,000 beds, plus a few proprietary institutions owned by physicians and other investors that operate to make a profit, but have only about 2,000 beds; the public sector is the 16-hospital municipal network of the Health and Hospitals Corporation, with just under 10,000 beds. Both sectors are in trouble. Though details differ, collective 1976 deficits are estimated for the voluntaries to be from $120 million to $170 million, and for the Health and Hospitals Corporation between $115 million and $135 million.

The voluntary hospitals began as, and in essence remain, the workshops of physicians in private practice, serving the affluent and middle class while maintaining outpatient clinics and some inpatient services for those less able to pay. Originally, their major sources of revenue were charities and direct payment by patients, but with the growth of Blue Cross and other forms of hospital insurance in the 1940's and 1950's, more of their income came from such third-party sources.

The big boom came in the mid-1960's with the advent of two major government programs: Medicaid and Medicare. The Federal Government pays a major share of the bills for patients over 65 and Medicaid, under which Federal, state and local governments share the health costs of the poor. At the same time, government funds for hospital construction, expansion, modernization and the provision of specialized services increased.

Expenditures and costs soared. The voluntary hospitals are competitive with each other, and thus understandably interested in providing high quality care, a goal expressed in ever more complex and expensive equipment and an increasing, expensive staff of technicians. At the same time, nonphysician and nonprofessional hospital workers, traditionally underpaid, won the right to unionize. By 1975 the hospital stay that had cost $311 in 1965 had reached $1,117, and government expenditures from Medicaid and Medicare, which began at $7 billion nationally in 1965, had reached $41 billion.

That was important, because by 1975 an overwhelming share of the hospitals' revenue came from government or government-regulated sources. A typical New York City private hospital now gets 33 percent of its income from Medicare, 32 percent from Blue Cross (whose reimbursement rates are regulated by the state), and 18 percent from Medicaid. Even before the recession and the state and city fiscal crises, there were cutbacks in services covered, reimbursement rates and, for Medicaid in particular, those eligible for coverage. The governments, in effect, passed the red ink on to the hospitals, which were caught in their own web of expansion, competition and technological explosion and rising (though still pitifully low) nonprofessional labor costs.

Inevitably, the red ink was passed on to patients in higher insurance premiums, reduced coverage, increased "co-insurance" (a surcharge for pay-by-yourself) and reduced services. Although there have been warnings of trouble, there is no evidence yet of major effects on the quality of patient care, research or educational activities in the private sector.

A Two-Class System

But red ink is not all that is passed on. Patients are. They are passed on to the public hospital system, the traditional haven for the indigent sick and the poorer half of what has been a two-class system of hospital care. All this, it was once hoped, would be changed by Medicaid and Medicare, by a promised city subsidy of $175 million a year for the municipal hospitals, by the construction of new facilities, and by the passage of the Ghetto Medicine Act and other state legislation to increase support of the vital ghetto patient clinics and emergency rooms.

But little changed: the $175 million a year never really arrived, the Health and Hospital Corporation claims; the more the public hospitals collected from Medicaid, the less the city government contributed in direct support; Ghetto Medicine Act money went to the voluntary hospitals, but the public sector was excluded; the voluntary hospitals were allowed to recoup some of their outpatient clinic losses by applying them to their inpatient Blue Cross reimbursement rates, but the municipals were not.

Finally, the Health and Hospital Corporation, faced with continuing charges of mismanagement, found itself forced to make huge staff reductions—6,700 in the last 18 months alone—leaving it in some instances unable to staff the beds it had, thus reducing the charges of inefficiency.

The most recent blow came in the last month. First, municipal hospital workers striking to protest further planned layoffs ended up almost literally buying back the endangered jobs by giving up their cost-of-living increases and other benefits, with help from last minute contributions of roughly $5 million each from the city and state. During the strike, the state announced a new Medicaid reimbursement rate of $197 a day for the public hospitals, rather than the $218, the rate paid to the voluntary hospitals; that the corporation had expected. If the higher rate had been approved, the corporation contends, it would have cost the city and state the same $5 million each and there would have been an additional $10 million in Federal funds. And still the public sector faces an additional $23 million operating deficit caused by the Medicaid reduction.

Although they represent only a third of the total system, the public hospitals provide 90 percent of the city's emergency room services, the majority of its ambulance services, and more than 152 percent of its institutionalized outpatient services. Although their vacancy rate is slightly higher than the private hospitals, the public hospitals have been the indispensable floor on which the private sector has operated.

There are proposals for the voluntary institutions to take over the public hospitals. There are counter proposals for the continued government financing of the public institutions so they can provide the same amenities and services commanded by the private sector. The only certainties are that the troubles in both sectors will worsen, that the solutions cannot be found without additional Federal funds and that financial help alone is unlikely to solve the problems without significant reorganization of the system.

The Atlantic Fields So Far Hold Only Hopes

U.S. Is Further Than Ever From Oil Independence

By WILLIAM D. SMITH

The Government's first sale of offshore oil leases in the Atlantic is really the first step into the unknown, a huge gamble by the oil companies which last week bid more than $1.1 billion for 101 tracts. At this stage, no one knows whether there is a single barrel of recoverable oil in this region, and no one will know for six months to a year after the companies start drilling. But the Government, fostering the program as part of its effort to reduce its dependence on foreign oil, has estimated that 400 million to 1.4 billion barrels of oil and 2.6 trillion to 9.4 trillion cubic feet of natural gas lie off the Atlantic Coast.

The Atlantic field is rated by the Interior Department as the most preferred of the nation's 17 major unexplored offshore areas. It combines high potential with what is considered low environmental risk, although environmentalists and others dispute that and are still fighting the program. And, considered of major importance, the field is near the huge East Coast market. New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Virginia and Maryland use 3.3 million barrels of oil a day, about 19 percent of total American consumption.

If oil is discovered, the companies will find ample refinery facilities in New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland. These refineries are now turning foreign oil into gasoline, heating oil, jet fuel and other petroleum products.

How much foreign oil, which is imported primarily from the Middle East, Canada, Venezuela and Nigeria, might this new field displace?

"No one should be deluded into thinking that Atlantic Oil will by itself save the nation from the Arabs," John Lichtblau, head of the Petroleum Industry Research Foundation, said. "It should be seen as an important part of an overall program of conservation and new discoveries needed to improve a deteriorating American energy situation."

Actually, maximum production from the area could amount to about 250,000 barrels a day if the maximum estimated recoverable reserves are discovered, and this would help reduce reliance on foreign oil, but not by a great deal. American consumption is nearly 17 million barrels a day and production is 8.1 million barrels a day. Petroleum gases associated with oil production increase this total somewhat. Nonetheless, imports will amount to 40 percent of American consumption this year. At the time of the Arab embargo in 1973, which started the nation's search for greater oil independence, imports amounted to only 29 percent of total American consumption.

Particularly significant is the increase of American dependence on the Arab producers. Direct crude oil shipments from Arab countries in the first half of this year supplied the United States with 12.4 percent of its total crude demand, compared with 6.6 percent a year ago.

For at least the next 18 months the expected increase in demand can only be met by imports and the only producers able to fill the order are the Arab states. Some respite is expected in late 1977 and 1978 when the oil from the Alaskan North Slope begins to flow, but by the early 1980's the 2 million to 2.5 million barrels a day from this source will only meet the increasing demand with the declining production from the traditional fields in Texas and Oklahoma. It is hoped that by this time the new offshore fields such as the one in the Atlantic will help ease the problem.

If natural gas is discovered off the Atlantic, it would have far greater impact than oil. The top estimate of the area's gas reserves of 8.4 trillion cubic feet would supply as much as 10 percent of the East Coast's demand.

Indeed, natural gas would likely be more beneficial than oil to both the nation as a whole and to the states facing the Atlantic. When the United States runs short of oil it simply imports it, as most industrialized nations have been doing since petroleum became the world's chief source of energy.

When natural gas production fails to meet demand usually someone goes without. There has been a shortage since the beginning of the 1970's. The Federal Power Commission says that severe natural gas curtailments can be expected this winter in 14 states, including New York, New Jersey, Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina. Because of natural gas shortages in the Middle Atlantic states in recent years, jobs have been lost, factories have become less competitive and consumer bills have increased.

How severe is the environmental threat to an area whose beaches provide a major source of pleasure and revenue?

The oil industry not surprisingly argues that the threat is minimal; that of the 20,000 wells drilled over 28 years only three major spills have occurred, and only one, in the Santa Barbara Channel, caused severe damage to a shore area. Environmentalists argue that the danger is far more substantial and that irreparable damage could be done by a major spill.

The Government argues that offshore drilling is far less of an environmental hazard than the oil alternative, tanker shipments of foreign oil. A National Academy of Sciences study contends that offshore oil production accounts for only 1.3 percent of the petroleum pollution in the ocean while tankers contribute 34.8 percent and river and urban runoff 31.1 percent.

These women lost their lives in the Colorado flood...

But they are still alive. They have a message for you.

On July 31 these women hastily left a weekend retreat in the Colorado Rockies. They had been warned to flee a flash flood which was roaring down the canyon. They started out, but never reached the bottom of the canyon alive. More than 100 others also lost their lives in the Big Thompson Canyon that same night.

A tragedy, people say. It is certain that these seven women who were part of the staff of Campus Crusade for Christ International will be deeply missed by family, friends and fellow staff members.

But what these women and their families would want you to know is that they are more alive than ever—in heaven. That they lived a full and wonderful life on this earth. And that they now are better off in the presence of the loving God and Savior whom they served.

If you were to die today, do you know for certain that you would go to heaven? Would you spend eternity in heaven with Christ or separated from Him forever. For those who have a personal relationship with Jesus Christ, death's sting has been taken away. God is our refuge and strength. A very present help in trouble.

He reaches out in love to all men and women, offering His forgiveness, peace and comfort through Jesus Christ. So there is no reason to fear life or death.

Jesus said, "I am the resurrection, and the life; whoever believes in Me shall live even if he dies, and everyone who lives and believes in Me shall never die" (John 11:25,26).

A personal relationship with Jesus Christ doesn't begin at death—but it is available to you now—in life. Twenty-eight other women leaders of Campus Crusade for Christ International left that retreat with these seven. They are still alive—physically as well as spiritually.

But they also have a more keen awareness of the delicate balance between life and death. And more than 5,000 other staff of Campus Crusade for Christ have a keener awareness of life. For them, life is Christ. For the women who died, Christ is life. The message that follows explains what these women want you to know—how you can find new life in Jesus Christ. They had committed themselves to sharing this message in life or in death.

Just as there are physical laws that govern the physical universe, so are there spiritual laws which govern your relationship with God.

LAW ONE

GOD LOVES YOU, AND OFFERS A WONDERFUL PLAN FOR YOUR LIFE.

(References should be read in context from the Bible wherever possible.)

God's Love

"For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whoever believes in Him should not perish, but have eternal life" (John 3:16).

God's Plan

(Christ speaking) "I came that they might have life, and might have it abundantly" (that it might be full and meaningful) (John 10:10).

Why is it that most people are not experiencing the abundant life? Because...

LAW TWO

MAN IS SINFUL AND SEPARATED FROM GOD. THEREFORE, HE CANNOT KNOW AND EXPERIENCE GOD'S LOVE AND PLAN FOR HIS LIFE.

Man Is Sinful

"For all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God" (Romans 3:23).

Man was created to have fellowship with God; but, because of his stubborn self-will, he chose to go his own independent way and fellowship with God was broken. This self-will, characterized by an attitude of active rebellion or passive indifference, is evidence of what the Bible calls sin.

Man Is Separated

"For the wages of sin is death" (spiritual separation from God) (Romans 6:23).

HOLY GOD

This diagram illustrates that God is holy and man is sinful. A great gulf separates the two. The arrows illustrate that man is continually trying to reach God and the abundant life through his own efforts, such as a good life, philosophy or religion.

The third law explains the only way to bridge this gulf...

LAW THREE

JESUS CHRIST IS GOD'S ONLY PROVISION FOR MAN'S SIN. THROUGH HIM YOU CAN KNOW AND EXPERIENCE GOD'S LOVE AND PLAN FOR YOUR LIFE.

He Died in Our Place

"But God demonstrates His own love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us" (Romans 5:8).

He Rose from the Dead

"Christ died for our sins... He was buried... He was raised on the third day, according to the Scriptures... He appeared to Peter, then to the twelve. After that He appeared to more than five hundred..." (I Corinthians 15:3-6).

He Is the Only Way to God

"Jesus said to him, 'I am the way, and the truth, and the life; no one comes to the Father, but through Me'" (John 14:6).

This diagram illustrates that God has bridged the gulf which separates us from God by sending His Son, Jesus Christ, to die on the cross in our place to pay the penalty for our sins.

It is not enough just to know these three laws...

LAW FOUR

WE MUST INDIVIDUALLY RECEIVE JESUS CHRIST AS SAVIOR AND LORD; THEN WE CAN KNOW AND EXPERIENCE GOD'S LOVE AND PLAN FOR OUR LIVES.

We Must Receive Christ

"But as many as received Him, to them He gave the right to become children of God, even to those who believe in His name" (John 1:12).

We Receive Christ through Faith

"For by grace you have been saved through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; not as a result of works, that no one should boast" (Ephesians 2:8,9).

When We Receive Christ, We Experience a New Birth.

(Read John 3:1-8.)

We Receive Christ by Personal Invitation

(Christ is speaking): "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any one hears My voice and opens the door, I will come in to him" (Revelation 3:20).

Receiving Christ involves turning from self to God (repentance) and trusting Christ to come into our lives to forgive our sins and to make us the kind of person He wants us to be. Just to agree intellectually that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and that He died on the cross for our sins is not enough. Nor is it enough to have an emotional experience. We receive Jesus Christ by faith, as an act of the will.

These two circles represent two kinds of lives:

SELF-DIRECTED LIFE

- S—Self on the throne
- ↑—Christ is outside the life
- Interests are directed by self, often resulting in discord and frustration

CHRIST-DIRECTED LIFE

- ↑—Christ is in the life and on the throne
- S—Self is yielding to Christ
- Interests are directed by Christ, resulting in harmony with God's plan.

Which circle best represents your life? Which circle would you like to have represent your life?

The following explains how you can receive Christ:

YOU CAN RECEIVE CHRIST RIGHT NOW BY FAITH THROUGH PRAYER

(Prayer is talking with God)

God knows your heart and is not so concerned with your words as He is with the attitude of your heart. The following is a suggested prayer:

"Lord Jesus, I need You. Thank You for dying on the cross for my sins. I open the door of my life and receive You as my Savior and Lord. Thank You for forgiving my sins and giving me eternal life. Take control of the throne of my life. Make me the kind of person You want me to be."

Does this prayer express the desire of your heart?

If it does, pray this prayer right now, and Christ will come into your life, as He promised.

Register now for the fall semester at NYU's School of Education, Health, Nursing, and Arts Professions.

There is no substitute for a great research university when it comes to updating your professional skills, revitalizing your career, or acquiring a second specialization.

At New York University's School of Education, Health, Nursing, and Arts Professions there are part-time evening programs for both master's and doctoral studies, as well as a full complement of bachelor's degree programs. And our location in Greenwich Village makes transportation convenient by subway, bus, or railroad.

Teachers: The Division of Education offers programs that cover the full range of teaching specialties. A number focus on the problems of inner city schools, others cover new areas such as mainstreaming and deafness research.

Health Professionals: The Division of Health offers programs in occupational therapy, physical therapy, prosthetics and orthotics, rehabilitation counseling, health education, and home economics and nutrition.

Nurses: The Division of Nursing has an undergraduate program, one of the largest graduate programs in the nation and continuing education offerings.

Arts Professionals: The Division of Arts and Arts Education develops performance and teaching skills in art, music and dance; offers unique apprenticeships with major artists and internships in arts therapies, arts administration, arts business and technology.

Registration for the fall semester begins the first week in September. Classes begin September 16. For detailed information about programs or registration, call Miss Baker at (212) 598-2685 or (212) 598-2496. Or, come in person to Room 32, 32 Washington Place.

MASTER OF ARTS in SUBURBAN AFFAIRS POLICY ANALYSIS and PLANNING

There is a pressing need today for men and women who can deal with the complex problems confronting America's ever-expanding suburbs. Meeting this demand will involve both upgrading the skills of personnel currently employed in suburban planning and policy analysis, and providing properly trained professionals for entry-level positions in the public and private sectors.

Adelphi University's M.A. Program in Suburban Affairs, Policy Analysis and Planning is designed specifically to provide the expertise needed by those who will work in this field. The 36-credit degree can be earned in two years of full-time study or through several years of part-time work. All courses are offered in the evening.

The curriculum is interdisciplinary and includes courses on land-use planning, policy analysis, sociology, demography, local government, systems analysis, research methodology, and economics.

For further information, contact Professor Hugh Wilson, Director, or Ms. Patricia Sweeney, Assistant to the Director, Institute for Suburban Studies, Adelphi University, Garden City, New York 11530 (516) 294-8700, ext. 7650.

Brandon Wilde, Age 7

Were you a naturally talented child, like Brandon? Are you developing that talent as an adult?

The artistic talent you have as a child is spontaneous, self-conscious. You make real efforts to visualize what you see and feel. Making pictures is fun. But when the world steps in and conditions the feelings, interferes with the process of seeing, the pictures become less, because the experience is less.

That's why the School of Visual Arts, in both Day and Evening Programs has structured a unique curriculum for the development of artists in all areas: Fine Arts, Media Arts, Film and Photography. To bring back the spontaneity to the process of seeing, to make the experience of creating art personal and rewarding for its own sake. To give you the kind of creative atmosphere where your natural talent can grow and find its own development with the support and guidance of a highly professional faculty.

Legion Disease Still a Mystery

Legionnaires' disease, a mysterious illness that has killed more than 200 people in the past few years, is still a mystery. Scientists are trying to determine how the disease is spread and how to prevent it.

The disease is caused by a bacterium called Legionella pneumophila. It is found in water systems, air conditioning units, and other places where water is stored or circulated.

Scientists are trying to determine how the disease is spread and how to prevent it. They are studying the bacteria and the people who get sick.

searchers at Rockefeller have developed a test that is expected to be the treatment of dia-which afflicts about 10 million Americans, can produce weight loss, fatigue and depression. These symptoms are caused by a chronic disorder in which the body is unable to break down and use the sugar in the blood properly. It is usually caused by a lack of insulin, a hormone that acts as a key to allow the cells to use the sugar. In severe cases, the body produces antibodies that attack the insulin-producing cells, leading to a condition called insulin-dependent diabetes mellitus.

The type and amount of insulin are determined by the tests that disclose the blood sugar at the time of the test. Unless these tests are conducted frequently, the levels of insulin can fluctuate, leading to complications.

Monitoring technique measurements of the type of hemoglobin in the blood that transports oxygen to the tissues. The researchers have found that changes in hemoglobin levels caused by diabetes are related to the quality of the hemoglobin. They believe that a test that measures the amount of a certain type of hemoglobin over a period of weeks would provide a more accurate determination of whether a person has diabetes.

The researchers believe that the concept itself, even when accompanied by adequate preparation and support, is causing concern among teachers. They believe that the concept itself, even when accompanied by adequate preparation and support, is causing concern among teachers.

den, a teacher of in Detroit, said that one of the American teachers last weekers have an innate y don't understand the students.

"For instance," Miss Ruder said, "there are four kinds of seizures and how does the average teacher know that a petit mal seizure can be virtually ignored while a psychomotor seizure means rearranging the furniture so that the child does not get hurt."

There are about 8 million children in the United States classified as handicapped either physically, mentally or emotionally. The United States Office of Education estimates that only half are in adequate programs and a million are not receiving any education.

Until recent years the handicapped receiving education had been segregated into separate schools or classes with little or no contact with so-called normal students, and often with inferior instruction. Now court decisions and legislation are forcing the mainstreaming of hundreds of thousands of the less severely handicapped in regular elementary and secondary schools.

Behind the movement is a civil-rights thrust, reflected in a law passed by Congress last November, that the handicapped are entitled to a "free, appropriate education." Advocates of mainstreaming contend that most handicapped children can adapt to a regular classroom if proper efforts are made at adjustment.

Legion Disease Still a Mystery

Scientists continue to rule out possible factors in the mysterious "legionnaire's disease" that struck in Philadelphia a month ago, but so far they have found no solid clues as to what to rule in; the cause of the affliction is still unknown.

New tests last week further reduced the likelihood that a virus, bacterium or fungus was the cause. Although this possibility has not been discounted completely, the emphasis in the investigation is now on toxic agents.

The death toll from the disease rose to 26 last week, making the total case count 173. Most of the victims attended an American Legion convention from July 21 to 24.

Akkadian For Everyone

To aid research into ancient cultures, scholars at the University of Chicago are compiling the first comprehensive dictionaries of early Near East languages and a grammar of a language once thought to be dead beyond revival.

The works, when completed, will greatly facilitate translation of ancient texts—related to medicine and law, for example.

Recent grants from the National Endowment for the Humanities will enable the scholars to continue work on the Akkadian language of the Babylonian and Assyrian civilizations, which flourished from 2500

Paul Heston/The New York Times
A handicapped student in a "normal" classroom.

B.C. to 100 A.D. in the area which is now Iraq; and to start work on the language of the Hittite Empire, which lasted from 1800 to 1200 B.C. in Asia Minor and northern Syria. Both languages are written in cuneiform script on clay tablets found in ancient ruins.

The grammar is for the language of the Amorites, a nomadic people who apparently migrated into Mesopotamia from the west and south about 2100 B.C., intermingling with the Babylonians and Assyrians. The language was never written and the last people to speak it died nearly 4,000 years ago. The only remains of the language are Amorite names in Akkadian documents.

Analysis of the names is the basis of the grammar. The names contain several parts of speech which, when translated from Akkadian into English, often make complete sentences. For example, the transcribed version of the name Mannu-Balti-Il means, "Who is without God?"

The Otter Controversy

Because of their ven for shellfish, sea otters off California, once near extinction but now flourishing under protection, have stirred up a controversy involving the Federal and state governments, fishermen and conservation groups.

Early in the century the otter population, which long had ranged all along the California coast, had been reduced to near zero by hunters seeking valuable pelts. The absence of otters upset the ecological balance of marine life, and a law was passed to protect the survivors that settled in the waters near Monterey. Since then the otter population has grown to 2,000 in an area centered off central California, and it is increasing 5 percent a year.

The focus of the controversy is the otters' voracious appetite for shellfish. Commercial and recreational fishermen complain that the otters are ruining their businesses by eating up all the Pismo clams, abalone and rock cod.

The state Department of Fish and Game wants to implement a control program to confine the otters to a certain area, and to conduct a long-range study of the animals' ecological impact on coastal sea life. The department can't act, however, because the Federal Government now has jurisdiction over otter management under the 1972 Marine Mammal Protection Act.

Animal protection groups oppose any interference with the otters until impact studies are completed. The groups contend that not enough is known about the animals' biology to control them properly.

Correction

A story in this section last week indicated that official use of a romanized script in the Chinese region of Sinkiang was replacing Chinese characters as part of China's plan to simplify the language. Actually, two minority languages based on an Arabic script, Uighur and Kazakh, are being converted to romanized script in the region.

Where We Stand

by Albert Shanker, President, United Federation of Teachers

Convention Stresses Broad Economic Issues Nation's Teachers Will Plunge Into Politics

In 1968 the organized teachers of America sat out the Presidential election, and their participation in other political campaigns was minimal. Most teachers believed that politics was a matter of personal preference and that teacher organizations should stick to narrow educational issues. In that year Richard Nixon defeated Hubert Humphrey by a margin of less than 1 per cent. America's three million teachers could have made the difference—but they didn't.

The main reason teachers sat out 1968 was that they believed they could successfully fight for better salaries and conditions for themselves and that they need not concern themselves with unemployment in private industry, high interest rates or the lack of adequate health care for all Americans. It is not that teachers were or are uncaring or insensitive, but that teacher organizations did not perceive such issues as being in their immediate area of concern.

Teachers have learned the hard way that they were wrong. This past week in Bal Harbour, Florida, some 2,500 delegates to the 60th national convention of the American Federation of Teachers, representing nearly half a million members, looked closely at the year just past in their working lives. It was a year of layoffs, of frozen salary increases (despite continuing escalation in the cost of living), of swollen classes, wholesale cutbacks in curriculum and woefully diminished supportive services. And the teachers made the inevitable connections.

They now understand that when cities, counties and states are forced to spend billions on welfare, that is money not available for schools.

Teachers now recognize that when high interest rates shut down the construction industry, that means millions of workers not paying the taxes that support public education.

Teachers now realize that for every 1 per cent of unemployment in the nation, we lose $16 billion in unpaid taxes and in money that must be spent on public assistance to the unemployed—funds that should be going to provide genuine educational opportunity for the students in their charge.

At the convention, 94 per cent of the members of the AFT voted to endorse the Carter-Mondale ticket in the 1976 Presidential election. In addition, the teachers called for——Federal takeover of the cost of welfare and a move to national standards of welfare payment, so that poor people will not be encouraged to move from states that have been less than generous to states with adequate assistance programs;

—Enactment of the Humphrey-Hawkins Bill (H.R. 50 and S. 50) for full employment; and —Creation of a national urban reconstruction corporation to provide low-interest loans to cities and other localities to stop the decay of our urban centers and help them retain and attract middle-income residents.

The rapid political maturation of teachers is demonstrated by the fact that along with such educational concerns as testing, mainstreaming, teacher education and greater federal funding of public education, equal attention was paid at the AFT convention to this general economic program whose enactment, along with national health security legislation, would return billions of dollars to our schools even as it improved the lot of all the American people.

Teachers have also decided to put meat on their support of the issues. They will volunteer as individuals in every level of the campaigns for President, for the Senate and for the House, as well as for state and local offices. They will ring the doorbells, stuff the envelopes, canvass by telephone and take the message to friends, relatives, neighbors and colleagues. They will write the letters to the editor and participate in candidate forums. And they will be asking candidates the tough question: Where do you stand on matters that affect whether I work at my job, how I do my job and whether those I teach are to receive a decent education?

Teacher unions will be politically active, too, sponsoring massive voter registration drives and promoting the education of their members on political issues and candidate positions.

Teachers can make a real difference in the politics of 1976, and they are determined to do so. Their own experience has taught them that those who work in education cannot be safe if those who labor at construction sites or on assembly lines face economic disaster, or if states and cities must bear the economic burdens of national problems.

Mr. Shanker's comments appear in this section every Sunday. Reader correspondence is invited. Address your letters to Mr. Shanker at UFT. Presidential Campaign

Now that the two major parties have decided on their Presidential tickets after the seemingly endless—and exhausting—preconvention campaigns, the American people have just ten weeks left to make up their minds on the fateful choice of national leadership for the next four years. That choice will depend both on the way the electorate sizes up the two principal candidates, and on the way the respective candidates propose to handle the great political, economic and social questions affecting this country's future.

For all the foolishness and froth that surrounds it, especially at convention time, the process of selecting—and electing—an American President is a profoundly moving and serious act of democratic faith and judgment. With the experience of 1972 still fresh in mind, the American people today have to be acutely aware of the significance of the decision they are called upon to make in choosing the nation's Chief Executive and also—in case his term is not completed—his designated successor.

As the campaign proceeds—and, despite the polls, it is the genius of the American political system that no election is settled until the ballots are counted—the American voter will be trying to evaluate the true character, instincts, philosophy and qualities of leadership of the Presidential and Vice-Presidential candidates. Of equal importance is the necessity to determine their respective positions on the basic issues.

In fact, the most interesting point President Ford made in his politically adept acceptance speech in Kansas City last week—perhaps the best political speech at either convention and delivered with more force and eloquence than the President has ever before displayed—was his assertion that he was "ready, eager to go before the American people and debate the real issues face-to-face."

As his Democratic opponent had already indicated willingness to undertake such a debate, there is now genuine ground for hope that the campaign will concentrate on "the real issues," issues of substance, and that it will not be distracted by emotional excursions designed only to whip up passions and inflame prejudices. In this connection, President Ford's disappointing choice of Senator Robert Dole of Kansas, a sharply partisan wheel horse of no national stature, places in doubt his alleged determination to wage a campaign on the real issues.

The real issues are not hard to find. They involve the basic questions of the national economy: how best to handle inflation which, though slowed, is still inordinately high, and unemployment, to which the same comment applies. They concern the inequity of taxes, and how to achieve sound and fair tax reform. The real issues go to the heart of the urban problem and the responsibility of the Federal Government to assist the cities and other localities in shouldering the burden of welfare, of reconstruction and rehabilitation, of education, health and housing.

The issues concern the basic flaws in our society: racial conflict growing out of economic and social injustice; the explosion of crime ignited by hopelessness and neglect; corruption at varying levels of public as well as private business; the imminent destruction of a livable environment, both urban and rural; threatened or actual erosion of individual rights, of personal privacy, of human freedom. The real issues include major aspects of defense and foreign policy, the energy crisis, questions of foreign trade and the accountability of multinationals, America's relations with her allies, the third and Communist worlds, the United Nations.

President Ford did well to demand discussion of the "real issues," but even in doing so in his acceptance address, he tended to smother them in meaningless and misleading generalities. It simply will not do for him merely to ape Harry Truman's campaign of 1948 by concentrating his attack on Congress.

In this revolutionized world, do Gerald Ford and Robert Dole give greater promise of clear, courageous and thoughtful leadership than do Jimmy Carter and Fritz Mondale? That is the question the American voter will have to decide in the next ten weeks.

grievances—clergymen, lawyers, educators, journalists, activists in women's and student organizations—are among some 140 now being detained without charge or trial under South Africa's drastic security laws. How can the Government expect to resolve its racial problems by dialogue with the nonwhites if it persists in shutting up those best qualified to participate in the dialogue?

Before her arrest, Winnie Mandela warned the Government that a few concessions would not suffice to restore order in the townships; only the promise of eventual full parliamentary representation for the black majority could accomplish that. As the history of black African nationalism clearly demonstrates, if the white rulers ignore her advice and silence her voice they will soon be hearing a rising chorus of far more strident voices.

Informed Consent

The requirement of informed consent before a patient is subjected to invasive medical procedure has become a major legal tenet and has figured in growing numbers of medical malpractice cases. This was precisely why Congress, in voting to have the Federal Government accept initial liability responsibility in the swine flu vaccination program, insisted that the informed consent provision be fully met. To that end, Congress asked that the appropriate Government form explaining the vaccination's risks and benefits be reviewed by the National Commission for the Protection of Human Subjects of Biological Research.

The commission has found the prepared form—some 60 million copies of which had been printed—to be inadequate. Without fully indicating that the patient, by signing it, was giving specific permission for the vaccination, the document was misleadingly called a registration form. Moreover, the form offered assurance that the vaccination could be taken safely during pregnancy, even though there are no proper double-blind controlled randomized studies proving this assertion.

Such omissions could expose a private manufacturer to serious legal consequences from malpractice suits; they might create the same hazards for the Government. Apart from such practical considerations the Government should set an example of precise adherence to legal requirements.

Still August

It always seems to catch us by surprise, that day when we know that summer is not endless, that autumn is just over the hill or up the valley. It follows a night of unexpected coolness, and we hear the katydids scratching at the dark. First katydids, and they miss a few notes; but they persist, and the old saying echoes once more in our memory: Six weeks from first katydid to first frost.

After the cool night comes a chilly dawn. But it is the light, not the temperature that marks the change. The clean blue sky, the sharp shadows, the way they fall. The setting for a brand new season. A blue jay calls and looks almost gray against the sky as he flies away. Not another bird makes a sound until a crow caws in the distance.

We look at the trees, half surprised to see the maples still in green leaves. So is the Virginia creeper on the dead elm. The goldenrod at the roadside is yellow, moon-gold yellow; but it always blooms in August. A cluster of day lilies is still in flower, but they look completely out of season. We have had a glimpse of autumn, heard its whisper, smelled its breath in the cider odor of windfalls from the apple trees at the garden's edge. But it was like meeting an old friend at an unexpected time and place, out of context. It takes a day or two to adjust. Then we remember that it's still August, and we get time in perspective again. August, not Autumn.

Part Way in Namibia . . .

A multiracial conference representing eleven tribal or ethnic groups in Namibia (South-West Africa) has announced plans for bringing that territory to independence from South Africa. Ten years ago, these proposals would have been hailed even by black African governments as a breakthrough. The plans call for dismantling apartheid, pulling Namibia together as a unitary state with safeguards for minorities and setting up a multiracial central Government that would aim at independence by the end of 1978.

On paper this program meets many of the demands made over many years by black Namibian leaders and their backers in black African governments. It envisions a Namibia very different from the one that South Africa's white Government was trying until recently to construct in the former German colony it has ruled since 1920.

The nonwhite participants in the conference at Windhoek clearly proved, by their insistence on the scrapping of apartheid and their agreement to a unitary state, that they are far from being the stooges of the white South African Government that more radical black leaders have made them out to be. And the representatives of 90,000 whites—about 12 percent of Namibia's population—demonstrated much greater willingness to accept multiracial government than South Africa's white rulers.

As it stands, however, the conference report faces certain rejection by most black African governments and it must raise questions even among those disposed to acknowledge the progress it represents. It was obviously rushed to publication to blunt a United Nations Security Council resolution of last January which called for sanctions against South Africa unless it agreed to elections in Namibia under U.N. supervision by August 31.

The document in fact contains no reference to elections and makes it evident that final agreement has yet to be reached on a "constitutional foundation" and a form of government. Representation at the conference was based on ethnic groups rather than political formations. Thus, the South-West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO), the only Namibian entity recognized by the United Nations, did not participate in the meetings and promptly denounced the program. The 25-member United Nations Council for Namibia also rejected the report and called on the Security Council to take "appropriate measures" against South Africa.

As with so many efforts to advance peaceful evolution in volatile southern Africa, the Windhoek report offers too little and has come along very late. To have genuine utility, the agreement has to be fleshed out quickly with provisions for elections supervised by the United Nations—whose ward Namibia legally is—and SWAPO must somehow be brought into the deliberations on the country's constitutional structure.

. . . South African Retreat

South Africa's white rulers have reacted in contradictory ways to the black protests and riots that have claimed more than 250 lives in two months. They have promised a "new deal" for blacks living in the segregated townships near the major cities—modest reforms aimed at meeting longstanding grievances. But they have at the same time arrested many of the leaders with whom they will have to discuss any reforms.

When a new round of rioting broke out in Soweto outside Johannesburg earlier this month, the white police sought help from Winnie Mandela, a leader of the Black Parents' Association and the wife of black nationalist leader Nelson Mandela, who has been in prison for the last thirteen years. But several days later the police arrested Mrs. Mandela—who already has spent seventeen months in detention and thirteen years under house arrest.

Letters to the Editor

On Removing Watergate as an Issue

To the Editor:
Principle as well as partisanship should lead Democrats to resist efforts to dismiss Watergate from the 1976 campaign. The question of party responsibility would be inescapable even if all the crimes known as Watergate had been committed or discovered after the election of 1972.

Actually, however, the Watergate burglary and other serious offenses occurred two months before the re-nomination of President Nixon. Nor were all those matters secret at the time. Attorney General Kleindienst testified falsely about L.T.T. in the spring. Common Cause sued to publicize Maurice Stans's secret $10-million fund. Everybody knew before mid-summer that one of the Watergate burglars was the chief security officer of CREEP. John Mitchell resigned on July 1.

It is true that leading newspapers and politicians began to ask as early as June 1972 whether the Democrats would really dare to inflate the Watergate caper into a major issue, but that is just the point. This is the first Presidential election since the fraudulent campaign of 1972. Now is the time to ask Republican leaders what they did to clean up their party during the summer of 1972 as well as in the miserable two years thereafter. Not even Elliot Richardson or Howard Baker seems to have done better than other leading Republicans in 1972. The point was to get "the President" re-elected. Only a few heroes, among them Senator Weicker and Representative McCloskey, tried to ask some of the right questions. Almost nobody in the Republican Party demanded forthright answers.

I don't mean to say that the Watergate scandals should be tied to the Republican Party for as long as the Republicans tied the Bloody Shirt of Secession and Slavery to the Democrats after the Civil War. I do consider it essential to the revival of our electoral system that a political party be held responsible for what it did (or neglected) at the preceding one.

Facing up to the extremely convenient negligence of 1972 may enlarge the Democratic victory of 1976, but it would damage the country less than the convenient amnesia that now threatens to descend on us as Elliot Richardson declares that his nomination would remove Watergate as an issue. The negotiated pleas of Agnew and Kleindienst tell the world that our criminal system treats political crimes lightly. In our electoral campaigns, at least, we ought to take them seriously.

Authority for Mars Mission

To the Editor:
What is the legal authority for the current Mars operation? What part of the Constitution authorizes the expenditures involved? Certainly they are not warranted by any of the powers that the Constitution specifically grants to the Federal Government. Nor can any of the enumerated powers be properly stretched by the elastic clause to justify the outlays. It is also obvious that they are not authorized by the clause in the Constitution which states the purposes for which money derived from Federal taxes may be lawfully used.

There was a time when it was commonly believed that an act of Congress, to be legal, must be consistent with and conform to the Federal Constitution.

If there are citizens who wish to promote space activity, they might provide the supporting funds by means of private contributions. Otherwise, the operations will be paid for by all citizens, through taxation and inflation—and therefore by many who can ill afford to pay and who see no benefit from the expenditures. The burden will seem to be doubly onerous if it appears to be imposed in violation of the supreme law of the land.

Energy for the Future

To the Editor:
Jacques Cousteau is well known for his important research on undersea life. He is not known for his work concerning energy systems, and shows in fact considerable lack of perspective and knowledge with regard to nuclear energy in his recent Op-Ed article (Aug. 8) on this subject. He states "simple, basic questions about actual efficiency, economic validity and safety remain unanswered." Why then are electric utilities the world over opting "to go nuclear," if the economic validity is in doubt? Does Mr. Cousteau think they are in business purposely to incur losses? Even without the profit aspect, many socialist countries (U.S.S.R., etc.) are rapidly introducing nuclear power, simply because it makes good sense, and because it allows stretching of the limited nonrenewable resources of fossil fuels (coal, oil, natural gas).

Concerning safety, the risks are negligibly small, in fact much smaller than those due to other commonly accepted human activities or natural causes (see, e.g., the Rasmussen Study). As to nuclear waste, the volumes involved are very small (supplying all energy needs of one person in the U.S. by nuclear fission would, during an entire lifetime, generate about 100 cc of high-activity waste, i.e., containable in an aspirin bottle). Permanent and safe disposal of nuclear waste outside the biosphere in stable geologic formations is one of the options we have.

Jacques Cousteau's suggestion that we should develop renewable resources to meet our energy needs would be more useful if he had also told how to achieve this aim: Proponents of solar, wind, tidal or geothermal power do not seem to appreciate the limited applicability and doubtful economic prospects of these often-mentioned renewable energy resources. Nuclear fission, combined with breeder reactor technology, can provide humanity with an economically viable and near-inexhaustible energy supply, enough for thousands of years. Future generations may not agree with Jacques Cousteau that it is better to live without the peaceful atom, and may judge us harshly for our lack of foresight if we continue to deplete rapidly our limited fossil resources.

A Plea to End Aggression

To the Editor:
The public activity of Andrei Sakharov is severely stigmatized by the Soviet press. However, no one should believe that the Soviet media reflects the true opinions of all segments of our society. Far from it. There are many here who understand the vital usefulness of what Sakharov is doing yet the stream of approval is but very weak.

In the memory of our nation, the mass terror and bloody murders of the Stalin era are still alive. Under Stalin's rule, the vertebral column of the Russian people was broken: The famous Russian intelligentsia, the pride and flower of the nation, had been nearly liquidated. So today what has remained of this social group that has struggled so long and hard for Russia's freedom and democratic development is in a deep apathy, quite indifferent to what destiny awaits our country.

Nonetheless, there are some sparks under the ashes: We can clearly see the resurrection of a humanitarian spirit and a noble hate against dictatorship with its oppressing rule. It is

During a wide-ranging talk in the den of his comfortable one-story house in this peanut, corn, pecan- and cattle-raising area, I wondered if extensive consultation with Congress might not encourage that body's desire to intrude American political considerations into formulation of United States international policy.

"No," he replied. "If the Congress and the President consult continually and closely on our country's objective needs—take, for example, Cyprus—there will be less political influence exerted on Congress or applied by pressure politics. Congress has a tendency to inject itself into foreign policy problems when it is not first consulted by the President. Therefore, I am convinced my formula will avoid partisan influence; not the reverse."

He believes the method he proposes will encourage a bipartisan approach to world problems by producing better understanding of global difficulties. He stresses: "The emphasis would be on discussion with Congressional leaders of both parties. I would furthermore favor inclusion of some qualified Republicans in my Cabinet, if I am elected, or in other positions dealing with international affairs."

However, he opposes an idea, once contemplated by Truman, of appointing two cabinet members to share foreign policy problems: a Secretary of State, who would remain at home, and a secretary of foreign affairs, who would be America's chief negotiator abroad. Instead, Mr. Carter explains:

"I want a Secretary of State like Marshall or Acheson, a strong spokesman for U.S. policy, a man who could analyze problems and maintain close relations with the President. But it is the President who must be responsible for ultimate decisions. Right now it isn't clear whether Kissinger or Ford makes the final policy decisions. I personally think it's Kissinger, not Ford."

"The Secretary of State must be the President's Number One adviser on foreign policy. But I would like to help him out by improving the quality of our major diplomatic appointments. I want these to depend firmly on merit. I am not under obligation to anyone and I don't believe people should be paid off for helping elect a President by getting embassies."

"Finally, at the same time, I would like a man of great competence to administer the National Security Council and to expand that body's role to include matters like foreign trade, economics, energy, agriculture, et cetera."

Before future columns elaborating these ideas and others related to foreign policy—choice of envoys, nuclear strategy, oil, the third world, overseas bases and military dispositions, Eurocommunism—I would like to add a brief personal impression.

For myself, a foreign resident over almost four decades, Jimmy Carter in the flesh is more appealing than Jimmy Carter the TV image; externally courteous, more relaxed; internally thoughtful, brisk, decisive. He seems to contrast in some respects with his rural Southern habitat of quiet creeks, swamplands dominated by great trees trailing Spanish moss, lazy cattle surrounded by white egrets.

This is a tender landscape that partially obscures its own vitality, truth and plain language. History must prove whether its first Presidential candidate since the Civil War can successfully impress these essential qualities on the nation.

Ford's Stockade Mentality

By James Reston

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 21—The best that can be said about President Ford here in Kansas City is that he made a good acceptance speech and avoided an open revolt within the Republican Party.

He strengthened the core of his army by narrowing its base, and now looks strong all the way from Grand Rapids to Topeka.

It is an interesting experiment in stockade politics, huddling the conservative faithful together in the Middle West, but it defies geography and the multiplication tables.

There is now, and for a very long time there has been, general agreement about how to win and lose Presidential elections in this country.

"The party with a minority following," concludes the Brookings Institution's study of "The Politics of National Party Conventions," "cannot hope to win by nominating a candidate in its own image—one who will meet with favor only among its previous following. If it insists constantly on such a choice, it can justly be accused of trying to commit political suicide."

"No America without democracy," says Clinton Rossiter in his brilliant study of "Parties and Politics in America," "no democracy without parties, no politics without parties, no parties without compromises and moderation . . ."

"The unwritten laws of American politics demand that the parties overlap substantially in principle, policy, character, appeal and purpose—or cease to be parties with any hope of winning a national election . . ."

This was the general rule that elected Gen. Eisenhower and even Nixon for two terms apiece, and Roosevelt for four. It was also the rule Mr. Ford himself followed when he came to the White House as a conservative and reached out to Nelson Rockefeller and stuck with Henry Kissinger as Secretary of State. Even Ronald Reagan tried for a "Republican coalition" with his appointment of Senator Schweiker of Pennsylvania as a potential Vice President.

Mr. Ford in the selection is the way it was done.

He didn't really choose Dole on ideological grounds. It is not reasonable to suppose that he chose him as the best possible No. 2 President or even as a young Republican who could hold the party together into the 1980's if they lost in November.

After all the talk of casual and disastrous last-minute Vice President choices, Mr. Ford did precisely that—he chose Dole literally in the middle of the night. It didn't make sense but it made temporary peace with Reagan. And besides, Carter was perceived to be thin-skinned and short-tempered, and Dole was regarded in the Republican Party as a good man with a hat- chet.

This is not the best advertisement for Mr. Ford's reputation as an amiable, decent guy who wants to run a "positive, responsible, Presidential" campaign, but he did it anyway, and the main point about it is, not that he figured it all out with evil intention, but that he really didn't figure it out, and had no long-range intention at all—only to get through the convention without provoking Reagan supporters into a demonstration and a conservative third party movement.

This has hurt the President even in his own party, for it raises a fundamental question about his judgment and his vision of the country's and even his own best interests.

For 25 years as a leading man of the Congress, he was never seriously considered for the Presidency. When he stumbled into it, he said he wouldn't interfere in the legal charges against Nixon whom he then pardoned.

He was also uncertain about the economy—fiddling with WIN buttons and balanced budgets. He was uncertain about Rockefeller, Kissinger, and about whether to campaign in the primaries or not to campaign; whether to debate Jimmy Carter or not debate him.

Mr. Ford's instincts about the Vice Presidency originally were quite different. He favored young moderate experienced men—George Bush of Texas, Donald Rumsfeld of Illinois—but then, almost by accident, he eliminated them by putting them into the C.I.A. and Defense Department beyond political recall.

What has hurt the President here is not that he is trying to take the country to the right or that he doesn't want to do what is right, but that he is confused in his own mind about what is right.

Nor is why those who have red the right wing's im and inflexibility fr. Reagan's selection gnition of political scessity for expanding beyond narrow ide- and of the need in vnement for finding common ground even among those who differ on specifics.

Only compare the Ford-Dole ticket to the Reagan-Schweiker ticket that might have been. The former is more narrowly based geographically and ideologically, it offers a more partisan figure for a possible Presidential succession, and it holds out virtually no hope of a significant Republican Party expansion.

By that measure, was Mr. Reagan or Gerald Ford more nearly in what Nelson Rockefeller in his better days used to call "the mainstream of American politics"? And if Mr. Ford had reached out to a liberal Republican—say, Charles Percy or Charles McC. Mathias—wouldn't he have been hailed by many of those who called Mr. Reagan's move "cynical"?

Following up the Schweiker choice, Mr. Reagan also made the most useful reform proposal in either party since the Democrats adopted their proportional delegate selection rules. His proposal that Presidential candidates name their running mates before the Presidential balloting was, of course, another maneuver aimed at the defeat of Mr. Ford, and it had its flaws—particularly the fact that it effectively ruled out any Presidential candidate as a running mate for another.

The proposed Reagan rule nevertheless would have provided one serious answer to a real problem, as well as a good starting point for useful debate. That the idea sprang from the heat of battle in fact gave it more validity than most academic proposals toward the same end.

Flexible and innovative as the Schweiker choice and the rules proposal showed him to be, Mr. Reagan nevertheless proved himself to be a more forceful advocate than Mr. Ford. That the Ford managers saw no alternative to accepting a palpably anti-Kissinger foreign policy plank put forward as another maneuver by the Reaganites was evidence of Mr. Reagan's power. So was the generally conservative tone of the whole platform, Mr. Ford's craven abandonment of the term "détente" and the reported influence of Mr. Reagan on the choice of Mr. Ford's conservative running mate.

But in the end, even in heartbreaking defeat, Ronald Reagan was a team player, too. He gave no aid and comfort to such potential party-wreckers as Jesse Helms of North Carolina; he did not take the platform before Mr. Ford at the final convention session, though urged to do so, fearing a demonstration that might have embarrassed the President; he did not encourage or permit a Vice-Presidential draft against Mr. Ford's wishes; and when he did speak, he lined up four-square for Republican unity and a Ford victory without abandoning his own views. Mr. Reagan's behavior was one clear reason why the hardest-fought Republican campaign since 1964 seems to be leaving far less bitterness and anger than the Rockefeller-Goldwater struggle.

So Ronald Reagan will be going back to California and to his widely followed newspaper and radio commentaries. And those of us who will continue to disagree vigorously with his hard-line views ought to do so with considerably more respect from now on. In some campaigns, the loser is the biggest winner.

Honest Pleasure Shatters Record

By STEVE CADY
Special to The New York Times

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y., Aug. 21—Possibly because he didn't have to look Bold Forbes in the eye again, Honest Pleasure acted as if he owned the race track today in the 107th running of the Travers Stakes.

Bertram Firestone's 3-year-old colt not only won the 1 1/4-mile race by four lengths, he set a stakes and track record in the process. Given a front-running ride by Craig Perret, Honest Pleasure came home safely ahead of a long-shot named Romes in 2:00 1-5.

In a leafy setting where time supposedly stands still, no other horse in the history of America's oldest stakes event had ever run it any faster.

As Perret put it afterward, "He was just a running fool today. He just took off with about an eighth of a mile to go."

Dance Spell finished third, 1 1/4 lengths back of Romes and three lengths ahead of Quiet Little Table in the field of eight. Ironically, this was the first time all season Honest Pleasure was not a heavy favorite.

The crowd of 31,255, third largest in the 113-year history of the Saratoga track, sent Denny Phipps's Mapestic Light off as the even-money choice. Honest Pleasure, trained by LeRoy Jolley, was a 2-1 second choice.

The immediate result of the victory was that Honest Pleasure's backers in the sweltering crowd lined up in front of the cashier's windows to collect at the rate of $6.29 for $2. Another result will be visible Monday when the canoe in the infield here gets a new paint job.

Each year, the canoe is painted in the racing colors of the owner whose horse wins the Travers. So the green and yellow of East-West Stable, owner of Wajima, will be replaced by the green and white-diamond motif worn by Firestone's horses.

Beyond that, Honest Pleasure's awesome victory in the $108,400 Travers leaves open the question of who's No. 1 in the 3-year-old division. Bold Forbes, front-running hero of the Kentucky Derby and Belmont Stakes, returned to training only this week.

He probably won't race again until mid-October. But he knocked out Honest Pleasure in both the Derby and Preakness, and further debate will be necessary.

Whatever the case, Honest Pleasure had the right answer today as he tried to move past idle Bold Forbes to the head of the class. He led all the way on a lightning-fast track with a first half in 46 3/5 seconds, six

Dr. Richards Beats Miss Beene In Tennis Week Open, 6-0, 6-2

By NEIL ANDUR
Special to The New York Times

SOUTH ORANGE, N. J., Aug. 21—Cathy Beene said her problems began when she knew she could win.

"The first game, I wasn't nervous," the 24-year-old Texan said of her opening women's singles match against Renee Richards in the $60,000 Tennis Week open at Orange Lawn Tennis Club today. "Then when I realized I could beat her, I got nervous."

Miss Beene became so nervous that she served 11 double faults ("more than I've ever served in a match in my life") and lost, 6-0, 6-2, to the 42-year-old Dr. Richards.

"I thought she'd be a lot tougher than she was," said Miss Beene, a former National Collegiate doubles champion, who was playing in her first professional tournament. "But she was as nervous as I was."

"I was exhausted," Dr. Richards said afterward of the 95-degree heat, the 60-percent humidity and the emotional strain of the last few days that overshadowed other elements of the 55-minute match.

It was a bizarre scene before a crowd of 2,700 at the usually staid Orange Lawn Tennis Club. Dozens of photographers crowded for key positions at midcourt to capture on film Dr. Richards's first match in the metropolitan area since she underwent a sex-change operation last August and changed her name from Richard Raskind.

National-television cameras taped the occasion, and Howard Cosell, the ABC broadcaster, stood in the north corner of the court and offered commentary while

Martin Hates Losing; Mets Must Cope

By PAUL L. MONTGOMERY

Like his team, Billy Martin's office at Yankee Stadium bears the marks of the manager's combative style.

The desk is strewn with letters of congratulation and solicitation, mementos and good-luck charms, arriving daily in increasing numbers as the Yankees move toward their first playoff season since 1964. In the midst of the clutter is a half-read copy of Bruce Catton's "Gettysburg: The Final Fury" — a reminder of the manager's fascination with the American Civil War.

On the wall is a sign headed "Company Rules."

"Rule 1—The boss is always right."

"Rule 2—if the boss is wrong, see Rule 1."

Since he first started playing professional baseball in Idaho Falls in 1946, Martin has been known as a man who does not take defeat lightly. "It started when I was a little kid, I guess," the 49-year-old manager said. "I never liked to lose at anything."

For Martin, who took over the Yankees on Aug. 2 a year ago, losses this season have been infrequent. The team dropped its first game in April, won the next five and has been in first place in the American League East since April 13. Their current edge over Baltimore is 10 games.

Despite the successes, Martin is a colled spring after a loss. Many times, he bursts out in recriminations against all other strengths, as it did when the Mets started life in 1962. But winning pennants, or coming close, as the Mets did in the 1969-73 period, requires scoring punch and tight defense in addition to the good pitching.

The first Met pennant, in 1969, was made possible by the midseason acquisition of Donn Clendenon and the blossoming of Clean Jones and Tommie Agee. The year before, the Mets had almost the same daily lineup except for Clendenon—and finished ninth in a 10-team league. The 1968 pitching staff actually gave up fewer runs than the 1969 staff—but Agee hit 54 points lower than in 1969, Jones 43 points lower, and between them they knocked in 79 fewer Syracuse farm club July 10. Then the Yankees purchased him from Syracuse Aug. 3.

When the Padres sold him, he was preparing to do a painting for Dave Winfield, a teammate, who was moving into a new condominium. He already had done a landscape for another teammate, Johnny Groth. The painting he donated to the White House through Dr. Ted Marrs, special assistant on Indian affairs, also was a landscape, a scene from North Carolina depicting an old tobacco barn.

"I like to do mostly landscapes," said Locklear, who comes from Pembroke, N.C.

"I like realism, but I also get into abstract realism. I like to stretch the imagination, do landscapes as fantasy, like I might change a green leaf into a blue leaf, do things as you don't see them but as you'd like to see them sometimes."

Locklear has liked to draw and paint since his early school days, but the Indian schools he attended in North Carolina never had an art teacher so he learned on his own. Then in his first year in high school he began taking a correspondence course.

One doesn't learn how to play baseball from a correspondence course, so Locklear learned that on his own, too, however, no one paid much attention to Indians playing baseball so he wasn't noticed by scouts or college coaches until he attended a Cincinnati Reds trout camp in Hope Mills, N.C., in 1969.

Once he became a professional baseball player, he didn't forsake his art career.

Is Jenner Really the World's Greatest Athlete?

By MARC BLOOM

Is Bruce Jenner, the Olympic decathlon champion, really the world's greatest athlete?

This question also could have been asked of Nikolai Avilov, Bill Toomey, Willi Holdorf, Rafer Johnson or any of Jenner's other predecessors. It surfaces after every Olympics, when decathletes finally accrue their status after years of anonymity.

The Olympic decathlon champion is generally labeled "The World's Greatest Athlete" just as the Miss Universe winner is labeled "The Most Beautiful Girl in the World." The labeling is done mainly by the media, well aware of the public craving for superlatives. It adds hype to the events and, therefore, to their coverage.

In the past, the hype usually was quick to subside. Decathletes, because of their introspective nature and higher to lack of commercial opportunity, often tended to avoid post-Olympic notoriety.

But now we have Bruce Jenner, whom 90 percent of us never heard of until last month. We have a man who not only can perform an extraordinary athlete feat, but also is movie-star handsome and has game-show effervescence. His wife is as pretty as he is, and they probably will go on to fame and fortune.

We are faced with at least a few years more of Bruce Jenner—in athletic retirement, he says. This expectation has stirred ire in some sporting segments, where it has been suggested that his performance in Montreal was unworthy of the praise it has engendered.

The most glaring rejection of Jenner's talents came the day after the closing ceremonies when a sports columnist called Jenner's achievement "the world's greatest mediocrity." The reasoning was that Jenner's work "falls inches, feet and seconds short of world's records in all events." Among the examples given was that Fibert Bay's world 1,500-meter record is 3 minutes 32.2 seconds while Jenner ran only 4:12.6 in the final event of the decathlon.

Clearly, this is "jack-of-all-trades, master-of-none" thinking. Sadly, it is probably not isolated. Millions of Monday Night Football fans, indifferent to the decathlon, might agree. But the theory as applied to the decathlon is so logical, so devoid of perspective and so blatant in its ignorance of track-and-field that a retort is easy.

First, an analogy. Suppose there comes on the scene a major league baseball player who can play every position well but not better than every other player. He can pitch 20 victories, not 30; bat .300, not .400; hit 40 homers, not 60; steal 50 bases, not 100; field gracefully at every spot, but not like a youthful Willie Mays.

Collectively, he excels as no one had before, but he falls short of the ultimate in each discipline. He would be the Bruce Jenner of baseball, and you could bet your Official Olympic Edition of Nude Quebec that such a phenom would be hailed by every sports fan in America as "The World's Greatest..."

Let's take a closer look at the Bayi illustration. Bayi spends 100 percent of his athletic time preparing for the 1,500 meters. His training, diet, competition, indeed his entire life style for many years, has been aimed exclusively at running 1,500 meters as fast as he could.

Bayi, of course, has run the distance 40 seconds faster than Jenner. However, Jenner spends not more than 10 percent of his time working on the 1,500. And he runs it not as Bayi would, at full rest, with total concentration and in an optimal competitive environment. He runs it after he has given maximum effort in nine events, with hardly a moment's reprieve in two short days. He reaches and races the 1,500 so drained, so sapped of the tools of sport that it is incredible that he still completes the 1,500, let alone runs the equivalent of a 4:33 mile.

Chances are, if Jenner devoted his career to excellence in the 1,500, he would be in Bayi's class. Likewise, if high jumping was his only forte, he might leap 7 feet 3 inches, not 6-8. But that would have been the easier path.

It is much more difficult, more challenging, and more demanding to commit oneself to master the completion of 10 varied events in 36 hours.

Moreover, the decathlon must be evaluated not by its components but in the aggregate. The decathlon, the ultimate test of athletic ability, is a task per se. Do we divide other athletic events and judge their parts to determine the overall value? No, we judge the outcome.

Franz Klammer won the Olympic downhill skiing. Parts of his run were imperfect. But he got down the mountain faster than the opposition and, considering the circumstances, recorded one of sport's greatest moments.

So did Bruce Jenner in Montreal. And now that the "mediocrity" viewpoint has been disposed of, the issue of whether Jenner is "The Greatest" can be examined more closely.

It boils down to whether my daddy can beat up your daddy. We could argue all day and get nowhere. How can we judiciously compare the best practitioners of baseball and football, soccer and tennis, boxing and gymnastics? Who's better, Ali or Fiedel?

It's only plausible method is to put into one hat all of the athletes who have sought to excel in one activity that requires superiority in every athletic discipline. What we have here are the decathletes. Have them compete in one championship contest. Call the winner "The World's Greatest Athlete."

But only for now.

Celebrity Tennis Players in the Zoo

By DICK SCHAAP

For the last few years, the National Broadcasting Company has been assigning me and a camera crew to cover each renewal of the Robert F. Kennedy pro-celebrity tennis tournament at Forest Hills. Each time, the assignment has come as a surprise to me. Usually, I cover sports.

I quickly developed a pattern for covering the event: I would go out to Forest Hills, search for a balanced sampling of celebrities (one actor, one actress, one singer, one jock, one writer, one commissioner, one Kennedy, one Republican, one black comedian and one gay); explain to Don Meredith that I couldn't use him on-camera because the network was afraid he would apply it against his guarantee; kick away Geraldo Rivera, who kept clutching for the microphone; tell Andy Williams that he couldn't sing his answer, that he would have to attempt to utter a complete sentence with a subject and a predicate; then ask each of the chosen celebrities such strictly tennis questions as:

Has anyone ever clocked your serve? Do you have a wicked forehand? Do you have a backhand? Do you favor simplified scoring or do you think Congressional secretaries should know how to type? Obviously, I was taking the whole thing too seriously. So last year I decided to cut out the technical stuff and ask each of the celebrities the same question:

What animal do you remind you of—on the tennis court?

The answers, to my relief, were varied, revealing and sometimes even humorous.

"An ass," said Ham Richardson, who, like most financial consultants, is famous for his wit.

"A tiger," confessed Art Buchwald, burning bright.

"A mongoose," said Bill Cosby, "because all of my opponents are rats, and mongooses kill rats."

"I thought mongoose killed cobras," I said, simultaneously attacking Cosby's grammar and his zoology.

"Ha!" parried Cosby. "That's all you know—you rat!"

"A cheetah," said Steve Smith and Cosby, eavesdropping, said, "Damn right. That month is a cheetah." Most taxi drivers agreed.

"An old Jew," said Alan King.

Dick Schaap is a sports broadcaster for the National Broadcasting Company, editor of Sport magazine and a prolific author of sports books. This look at the tennis zoo was written for the souvenir program for next Saturday's Robert F. Kennedy pro-celebrity tennis tournament.

I explained to King that I'd appreciate it if he could give me a second answer because I was afraid that, on television, his first answer might be offensive to Jewish people.

"A camel," said Alan King, dryly.

I told him I was afraid that his second answer might be offensive to the Arab people.

"A phoenix," said Ethel Kennedy, mything the point (or, as Barbara Walters would say, "missing the point").

"A giraffe," said Julius Erving.

"A bear," said Dave DeBusschere.

"An elephant," said Rosie Grier.

"A Rosie Grier," said Frank Gifford.

"Go fan yourself," said Elton John, who was—at least as far I could tell—the least cooperative of the celebrities. And he didn't quite say it that way.

I tried to explain to John that, on television, his answer might be offensive to the American people.

"Bug off," he said, diminishing even further his chances of appearing on NBC News that night. And he didn't quite say it that way.

"You serve like a girl." I countered, softly, so that none of his 427 armed guards would hear me. With my luck, Billie Jean heard me and took offense.

Despite Elton John, I intend to return to the zoo next Saturday, to visit once more with all the lions and gazelles who turn out each year to honor the memory of Robert F. Kennedy. He was a noble animal; he was a thoroughbred. Like Bold Ruler, he had impressive breeding, he hated to lose and he certainly was an amazing sire.

Sports Editor's Mailbox: Trans-Atlantic Sailing / Fencing / Anthem

To the Sports Editor:

An Aug. 1 article on the trans-Atlantic singlehanded yacht race made interesting reading, but in addition to its negative tone it contained several errors.

For one, Mike McMullen had an adequate supply of emergency rations in addition to 20 days of standard provisions. Clare Francis was not saying "never again" to solo sailing. She is currently participating in the L'Aur singlehanded race in Europe.

With considerable experience in this area, I support the right of individuals to pursue any sport or way of life, dangerous or not, as long as she or he is not jeopardizing lives or rights of others.

It is ironic that The Times ran an editorial on the same day mentioning that the world needs its Mars and Everests "not only to challenge human ingenuity but even more to challenge the human spirit."

The article about the singlehanded race ended by saying that when lives are lost and passed off as part of the game, the game is over. I would say no sailor ever views offshore passage-making as a game. It is a deadly serious business. The event isn't a game and it isn't over.

Fencing Champion's Conditioning Extolled

To the Sports Editor:

In reference to your story of July 13, "Gymnastics: Hopes Dim; Fencing: A U.S. Thrust," I would like to correct an opinionated slug against our national women's foil champion, Ann O'Donnell. You quote John Nonna (first alternate, men's foil team) as having stated that "Annie O'Donnell's physical conditioning is poor."

Ann O'Donnell has been observed by Giorgio Santelli, a revered maestro, who said, "She's in fantastic shape." Maestro Santelli, unlike Nonna, had seen Ann O'Donnell in many practice sessions. These 2 1/2-hour sessions are an assiduous commitment for this national champion, who also teaches handicapped children on a full-time basis.

Ann devotes blocks of time to her individualized lessons (six a week). She has established for herself a training program that includes a regular routine of working with weights at Jersey City State College and outdoor running at Bayonne Park. Is this a program for a person in poor physical condition?

It is impossible to maintain an attacking, aggressive game (which is Ann's) throughout an Olympic national trial and be in poor condition. As a previous national foil champion I feel more qualified to make this observation than a mere alternate. John Nonna has confused opinion and fact.

Use of National Anthem At Events Defended

To the Sports Editor:

I resent Reuben Gabel's remark (Mailbox, July 25) that "I still question the relevance of the national anthem as a prelude to every routine sports event."

If he had watched the Olympics on television, he must have gone through torture on hearing our anthem played so often. If he did not hear it at sports events, when would we ever hear it?

Attending churches in England, I heard "God Save the Queen" at the conclusion of the services. This was in churches of every denomination.

Gabel is probably like my neighbor who hangs his flag out on June 14 (Flag Day) and July 4. When I hang my flag out other than those dates, he asks, "What's the occasion?" I reply, "No occasion, I just love to see the flag fly."

A Comment on Behavior Of Tennis Players

To the Sports Editor:

Time was when the call of the tennis linesman was law and the decision of the man in the high chair was law beyond appeal. True, the disgruntled player would often mutter to himself and cast imploring looks skyward, but by and large his protest was a pantomime recognized only by the audience. Compromise resulted only when the beneficiary of the "bad call" purposely netted the next ball, for which he was roundly cheered as a real gentleman.

Today, the offended player cross-examines the linesman, challenges him to point out the imprint of the ball and heatedly demands that the umpire remove him in favor of one with eyesight more sympathetic to his poor score, after which he addresses the "jury" in the seats.

While some will suggest that current on-court behavior of players and officials has its roots in the antics of Ily Nastase, quite likely the huge money stakes are equally responsible not only for the player aggressiveness but also for the fact that the officials now seem aware of the gravity of a wrong call in terms of thousands of dollars as against empty silver cups. Thus, they are less sure of their infallibility and more prone to persuasion, so that differences of opinion are now resolved by replaying the point.

The first event in 1952 carried a purse of only $15,000, with a $2,400 share for the winner. This weekend's purse is $210,000, with a $40,000 first prize.

Over the years, with only a few exceptions, the great golfing names have competed at Wethersfield, many before they became well known. One of Arnold Palmer's early victories was recorded here in 1956.

To give the silver anniversary a sentimental touch, the organizers have invited former winners to play in the 1976 tourney.

Allowing for multiple victories—four for Billy Casper and two for Palmer—there are 20 such players. Fifteen teed it up Thursday and yesterday. The 1964 winner, Ken Venturi, has also come to Hartford, but not to play—he is here in his regular capacity of commentator for the CBS telecast of the tournament.

The more recent victors had no difficulty making the 36-hole cut, which worked out to 142, even par. They included the defender, Don Bies, and Casper, Lee Trevino, George Archer and Bob Murphy.

Among the winners from farther back to qualify for the final two rounds were Sam Snead, 1955; Palmer, 1956 and 1960; Gene Littler, 1959; and Art Wall, 1956.

Stockton Misses Cut

Ted Krull, who won the first event in 1952, shot 68, 77—145 and missed the cut by three strokes. Bob Toski, the 1953 champion, missed by only one shot with his 71, 72—143. Charles Sifford, the 1967 winner, was eliminated with 74, 70—144, and so was Bob Goaly, the 1962 winner, with 77, 71—148.

David Stockton, who won in 1974, missed the cut with 76, 70—146. Stockton, who won the Professional Golfers' Association championship last Monday at Bethesda, Md., holds a special place of affection in the Hartford community.

When he won two years ago, Stockton donated his $40,000 winnings to local philanthropies—$5,000 on the spot, and a pledge of $1,000 a year for the next 35 years.

Stockton's name is given to one of the projects that benefits from this tournament. This is the Stockton Playroom, an innovative environment at the Hartford Regional Center for the benefit of retarded children.

The tournament is conducted by the Hartford Jaycees, with more than 600 volunteers doing all the work, and this year's net proceeds are expected to pass $40,000.

Most of the money raised is spent in the fields of crime and correction, mental health and retardation, recreation, community health, child care and protection, and youth activities.

Dave Stockton, P.G.A. champion, says weekend golfers tend to crouch too much and stiffen their legs, as at right, playing recovery shots around the green. Instead, the proper method, at left, is to keep the upper body erect and to flex the knees.

How to Develop Scrambling, Using Dave Stockton's Tips

By NICK SEITZ

Dave Stockton, the new Professional Golfers' Association champion, is known as a scrambler. Most players would resent the reputation. Stockton relishes it.

"A lot of people sneer at a scrambling round, as if it wasn't wellplayed," says Stockton, who scrambled to a winning par on the last hole of the P.G.A. "But if you stop to think about it, you hear about a player scrambling only for a good score, if he has a bad score, he hasn't scrambled."

His fellow pros say that Stockton can get the ball up and down out of a ballwash-er. In other words, when he gets in trouble around the green, he can save par with a chip or pitch and one-put.

The ability to scramble, more than anything else, sets the professional apart from the weekend player. A pro like Dave Stockton, who rarely hits the ball farther than 250 yards, can appear to be shooting an 85 and come in with a 72. The weekend player can appear to be shooting an 85 and come in with a 98.

"Everybody misses greens," Stockton says. "Weekend players miss more greens than the pros. You have to learn to scramble."

If you miss the green, the first thing to do, Stockton says, is forget about your mistake. The important shot is the next one, and it needs your full attention.

Evaluate your lie and the overall situation, then paint a picture in your mind of the shot you want to play.

Rather than aim at the pin from off the green, Stockton picks a spot where he wants the ball to land.

"I have a better feel for both distance and direction if I aim at an intermediate target and let the ball run the rest of the way," he says.

He is satisfied to get the ball inside the 10-foot circle around the cup. "Trying to sink the shot puts too much pressure on you," he says.

Stockton uses a sand wedge for most of his scrambling shots, regardless of whether he's in the sand or not. He can play enough clever shots with his sand club to co-locate with Doug Hennings in "The Magic Show."

The Horse at Home

Honest John Morrissey
He bankrolled the race meeting

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y., Aug. 21 —A friend who is attached to horse racing and other good things like music and books and steam railroads says that every now and then he encounters someone who says, "I've never been to a race track in my life and I don't know whether I would enjoy it." His reply never varies. "Don't try it at Aqueduct," he says, "or Charles Town or Belmont, much as I like that track. Some August when you're up around the Adirondacks; drop into Saratoga. It will save you a lot of trouble, because if you don't enjoy racing there, you won't like it anywhere."

The man is right, of course, even though there are occasions when the Queen Mother of American gambling hells, gracious old girl that she is, cannot make all her visitors altogether comfortable. Today could be such an occasion. This is the day of the Travers Stakes, the race that was the high point of Saratoga's meeting in 1864 and has been the high point of 106 meetings since then. What started out as a mild and dewy morning cooked up a scalding head of steam before the first post, and along about the sixth race it may be difficult to draw a breath of air that hasn't already been used by somebody else.

Last year the Travers was no great attraction. Foolish Pleasure, Master Derby and Avatar, winners of the Kentucky Derby, Preakness and the Belmont, were missing. A filled ankle eliminated Forteten, who had come East from California looking like a smasher. That left only four runners of limited renown to contest the issue with Wajima. In spite of this, 32,588 customers were stuffed into the old kral, an achievement roughly comparable to fitting a Size 17 neck into a 15 collar.

That was the biggest crowd in Saratoga's 113 years, and the betting total of $2,592,084 was the track's highest one-day mutual handle. Today's crowd was a shade under the record, numbering 31,255, but in the sweltering heat it seemed twice that size.

Big Business

As a matter of fact, business has been improving steadily here for several years and was on the rise even before Gerald Ford moved into the White House and, by sheer force of intellect, wrenched this country out of recession. Last year's meeting attracted 433,503 immortal souls who thrust $40,444,871 through the wickets. Both these figures are all-time highs, but another week may see them topped. Up to yesterday morning, attendance for 16 racing days was 6 percent ahead of the comparable period last year and betting was up 12.1 percent.

Ever since the mutuels came to New York, Saratoga racing has been the target of intermittent attack, mostly from politicians who think the thoroughbred strain was developed solely to provide tax revenue for the care and feeding of public servants. These statesmen have argued that it is a sinful waste to shut down racing in the metropolitan area for a month so the beautiful people with their big stables can move up here to disport themselves.

Anybody who considers Saratoga racing a plaything of the swells should see the foot-sore hundreds waiting in long lines for tables on the clubhouse veranda so they can watch the horses at their morning works while breakfast on Hand melons, blueberry muffins and other staples of this spa.

Saratoga does bigger business than Monmouth on the Jersey Shore, Del Mar in southern California or Chicago's the match was in progress. The controversy that has raged over the presence of Dr. Richards in the tournament was underscored by the spectators, many of whom said they were here only out of curiosity.

"I don't think she should be allowed to play in women's tournaments unless she agrees to a sex test," said Dorvin Rosenberg of Warren, N.J.

However, Rosenberg's wife, Ilene, disagreed.

"I think nature is not always correct," Mrs. Rosenberg said, echoing the sentiments of other women spectators. "She looks like a woman. She is a woman. Chromosomes make things scientific, but nature is not always 100 percent correct."

Although she won only 6 points in the first set, Miss Beene was convinced that Chris Evert and other top women professionals could beat Dr. Richards.

"She's not as strong or powerful as I anticipated," the 5-foot-7-inch, 130-pound teaching pro from Houston said of Dr. Richards, who is 6 feet 2 inches and 147 pounds. "She's got deceptive ground strokes, and I think she's a little steeper than she proved today."

Kathi Harder, another pro, who could meet Dr. Richards in the third round, said, "She's very good, and she's not even playing all-out."

Scott Is Surprised

But Gene Scott, a former nationally ranked men's player, who needed three sets to beat Richard Raskind, the former Dr. Richards, two years ago, was surprised at Dr. Richards' lack of stamina.

"Her endurance is nowhere near what it was, and she doesn't move as well either," said Scott, who as tournament director and a friend approved Dr. Richards' entry. "Basically, Dick Raskind never played the power game as a man. But the motion on her serve has changed now, too. I don't know whether it's because of the operation or what."

Dr. Richards still showed fluid left-hand ground strokes,

East, West Compete in Polo Today

An East team that has never played together will meet the West today in the third annual polo game between foursomes with players under 25 years old at the Oak Brook (Ill.) Club.

The East team, which lost last year after winning the opener in the series two years ago, will be made up of Lyle Graham of Darien, Conn.; Paul Rizzo of West Hills, L.I.; Heath Manning, Jr. of Columbia, S.C.; and Joe Muldoon of Columbia, S.C.

Three of the four players have been named for the West team, which was struck by tragedy a week ago when Tom Blicke of Barrington, Ill., died of injuries he suffered when he fell off a horse in a scrimmage. The three definite starters for the West are John Ryan, Pat Connors and Dave Wigdahl. Several players have been working out at Blicke's No. 1 position.

"The version we heard of the accident was that Tom was just engaged in a regular scrimmage and his reins got caught on another horse," said Graham. "His horse did a flip and landed on top of him."

All New to Team

Graham, who has been practicing at the Ox Ridge Hunt Club, his home field, in Darien, Conn., all week, said no player was permitted to appear in the game more than once. "So none of us were around last year," he said. "But they tell me the East lost because the team did not have enough ponies. We'll be well mounted this time. I'll have five ponies myself, and Sam Register, the manager at Ox Ridge, is contributing his six-horse van to us."

The Polo Corporation of the Americas has announced the team for its all-professional Gould World Cup match, scheduled for Oak Brook on Sept. 18.

The White team will be made up of Tommy Wayman, Red Armour, Bart Evans and Corky Linfoot. The Blue team will line up with Joe Barry, Roy Barry, Charles Smith and Dr. William Linfoot.

CLEVELAND (UPI)—The American Professional Softball League says it will hold its first professional season next year with eight franchises.

The teams will be Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Detroit, Los Angeles, Washington-Virginia, Milwaukee and Louisville.

The owners for each franchise have paid $25,000 to enter their teams in the league.

Len Pardo, of Lexington, head of the league, says franchise problems include lack of playing facilities and seating for 10,000 spectators. The field for professional softball will include outfield fences.

Joseph Durso Ribbons on the Goal Posts

This is no time to distract you from the rise of the Yankees, the reappearance of tennis at Forest Hills or the return of the horses from Saratoga next week. But the football season, which waits for neither time nor tide nor World Series, is upon us again. So we have worked up this little scouting report before the kids start asking embar...rassing questions like: "Why do they have ribbons on the goal posts this year?"

...They have ribbons on the goal posts this year to tell you and the guy kicking the field goals which way the wind is blowing. They're bright orange, they're 2 inches wide and 36 long, they're clamped to the outside of each upright to keep them from getting wrapped around the post and they've got them at both ends of the field because the wind blows in six directions in places like Shea Stadium.

...So much for the kids and the orange streamers. Now for the deep-down changes you'll be noticing in the National Football League, which stops playing "exhibitions" and starts playing "games" in exactly three weeks.

...The first thing you'll notice about pro football this year is that it has one less league but two more teams. That's because the World Football League went out of business for lack of hard green, while the good old N.F.L. expanded to Tampa, Fla., and Seattle, Wash. So now you'll have 196 games to confuse you until the playoffs instead of only 182.

...You will also have a little geography to confuse you, because the Florida team insists on being called the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. In fact, when they played an exhibition in Wisconsin the other week, the Green Bay Packers referred to them as the "Tampa Buccaneers." Piqued by the omission, the Buccaneers threatened to subtract the "Bay" from their rivals' name the next time they met and to call them the "Green Pack-ers."

...Roof Over Their Heads
To continue the scouting report: Football has two new teams but three new stadiums this season. Big ones. The Buccaneers will play in the expanded Tampa Stadium, which seats 72,000 now; the Seattle Seahawks will open in the Kingdome, with 65,000 seats, and the vagabond New York Giants will move into the Jersey Meadows stadium, with 70,000 seats.

...The home opener there is Oct. 10 against the Dallas Cowboys, giving you plenty of time to think up an answer to the next question: "Why do you call them the New York Giants if they play in New Jersey?"

...Down on the field this year, the foot- ball people have really stretched their imagination to make things interesting. None of those intricate changes in the rules of two years ago when they moved the goal posts back 10 yards, moved the kickoff back five yards to the 35, allowed only two outside men downfield on punts and placed the ball back on the line of scrimmage if you missed a field goal from beyond the 20-yard-line.

...The idea was to restore the touch- down's true value by lessening the "cheap" field goal with its automatic 3 points. It worked, too. Last season, they tried 288 fewer field goals, made 174 fewer field goals and scored 141 more touchdowns. Now then, with all those heavy changes in the rules already accomplished, there wasn't much for the

...up to m room. They put me on the same floor with the players, but I stayed out of sight. I only recognized one guy—Joe Namath.

...If he saw Gant he didn't know him. "I sympathize with Gant," he said. "I've come into this type of situation before and beat outguys for a job. I'm trying to make my living and he's trying to make his. I'm looking to get his job."

...He was prepared, he said, for rejection. "I feel fortunate," he explained. "I had two years of pro ball under my belt—which most people can't say."

...Back at the hotel, Gardi was explaining to a questioner that he had timed a thou...sand kicks of Gant, and that Carrell's best had to be measured against Gant. "I needed something to excite me when I watched Carrell," said Gardi.

...Coach Lou Holtz discussed the new punter with Gardi and Holovak and then said, "We'll stay where we are. I think it would be a drastic move to switch punters now. But we're keeping Carrell's address and we know where to reach him."

...Two Linebackers Added
The Jets picked up two linebackers to bolster the rookie-dominated unit. They are Mike Lemon, who came on waivers from Kansas City, and Don Coleman, a free agent.

GREEN BAY PACKERS

If Tampa Bay becomes just Tampa, will Green Bay be known as Green?

N.F.L. to do this year except to add a few little touches. The idea was to "involve" the fan in the action more, whether the fan was watching the game on the tube or on the 50-yard line. Thus, the orange ribbons on the goal posts, plus a few other cosmetic flourishes.

Who's Got the Coin?
One thing you'll notice, especially if you're the quarterback, is a large 30-second clock at each end of the field. The team with the ball has 30 seconds to put it into play once it's been "spotted" down by the official. Now everybody can watch the seconds tick off, they way they can watch the 24-second clock tick off in basketball. It will, says the man from the league office, "add a dash of fan involvement" to say nothing of quarterback involvement.

...Another change is a little more subtle: Three minutes before the opening kick-off, the opposing captains will meet at midfield for the coin toss to decide who kicks, who receives, who defends which goal. They used to do it 30 minutes early, then merely go through the motions later. The "extra dash" in this case is that the teams now will have only three minutes to prepare their first series of downs, though some people suspect that George Allen has already figured out his first series of downs for Game No. 10.

...Finally, they are hanging little micro- phones under the shirts of all 15 referees in the league so that their penalty calls can be heard in the press box, on the public-address system and in the television control truck. You know: "We have clipping on No. 74, Browns." They've been doing this in some games for a year, but now it'll be done in all games, though they're having some isolated trouble avoiding conflicts with police-call and tactical broadcasts.

...We taped some of last season's ex- perimental broadcasts," the commis- sioner's man says, "and sent them to all the referees. They've been listening and rehearsing. Some of them probably are practicing in front of mirrors. Some refs are outstanding public speakers, like Tommy Bell of Lexington, Ky. He's a lawyer with style and a drawl. Or Jim Tunney, who's an educator, like so many of the other referees who are teachers or principals and who have sports back- grounds—and weekends off."

...So there you are, football fans, from orange ribbons on the goal posts to microphones on the teachers. Any ques- tions, kids?

Pamper Yourself at Yardarm Beach II

The second—and last—phase of the Condominium Resort in nearby Westhampton Beach.

Nestled between the majestic Atlantic and tranquil Moriches Bay, Yardarm Beach II represents the final phase of the Condominium Resort on the Dunes.

In less than one year, the entire first phase of this complex has been nearly sold out. Now, we are opening the second—and last—phase. And many believe we have saved our best for last!

Here, you can relax completely. All exterior maintenance is in the hands of a professional staff. So, you'll have more time to spend on the broad, 600-foot wide private beach, perfecting your backhand on one of our three tennis courts, or basking on one of the inviting sunpuzzas that surround our two swimming pools.

Here, listening to the sound of the surf and the cry of the gulls, you'll be able to sit on your private terrace and watch season after season of spectacular sunsets over the sparkling bay.

This condominium was designed to blend with the dune and drifting cloud. Yet, beneath the natural textured wood is a core of rock-solid concrete and steel.

Need more incentive? Then, consider the tax advantages and the savings. For little more than the price of a season's rental, you can own your year-round place in the sun. But only if you hurry!

Trades A Must For Mets

During the next three years, the Mets were competitive and in 1973 they won another pennant. That year the pitching was first rate but not overwhelming, with Tug McGraw making the difference in relief; but there was at least some worthwhile hitting from Rusty Staub, John Milner and Wayne Garrett; and even so, it was a peculiar pennant, attainable with an 82-79 win-loss record.

Since then, the Mets have tended to put all their eggs in the pitching basket. It is sad, and possibly insulting, but true that there is little difference between the daily lineup the Mets offered today and the one they started with in 1962. The pitchers and Jerry Grote, the catcher, are far superior to anything the Mets had then, when they lost 120 games, but the other seven positions might be a standard.

GiL Hodges then wasn't much different from Joe Torre now. The present infield of Felix Millan, an often-hobbled Bud Harrison and Roy Staiger may be better in the field than Charlie Neal, Elio Chacon and Felix Mantilla were, but they don't offer as much offense. And the original Met outfield of Frank Thomas, Richie Ashburn, Gus Bell, Gene Woodling and Jim Hickman were stronger, all round, than any combination the Mets have now.

In short, those joke-provoking Mets of 1962, given today's pitching staff, might have been able to win approximately half their games, and today's Mets, saddled with the 1962 pitching staff, might have trouble winning more than the 40 those Mets did.

All of which does not mean, of course, that the Mets are back where they started. They do have this pitching staff, and it does keep the team at a much higher level. But things can't improve until the daily lineup is strengthened, and that can be done only by wise use of some of the pitching in a trade—and by making the most of whatever free-agent signing opportunities will appear in October.

That the Mets have suffered in recent weeks from injuries to Dave Kingman and Ed Kranepool is true, but it doesn't change the basic picture. Injuries are inevitable, and these underline the shallowness of the rest of the offense. The Mets may wind up with only two men, Kingman and Milner, surpassing 50 runs batted in, or 10 home runs, and along with the lack of power there is lack of speed. That's a formula for continued futility, and it will be up to the front office to revise it.

Homers Help Down Braves

By DEANE MCGOWAN

George Foster, who leads the National League in runs batted in, and Johnny Bench, nine times an all-star performer, hit solo home runs to power the Cincinnati Reds to a 4-3 triumph over the Chicago Cubs in Riverfront Stadium last night.

Foster drilled his 28th homer and 106th run batted in off Ray Burris in the sixth after Bench had put the Reds ahead 2-1 in the fourth with his 13th homer.

Bench's Cincinnati long-range hitting, Gary Nolan posted his 11th victory.

Baseball Roundup

against 8 defeats, but he needed relief from Rayley Eastwick, who pitched the final two innings to record his 17th save.

Burris, who says his six-game winning streak came to an end, was a victim of some shoddy fielding by his Chicago teammates. He went six innings, allowing four runs on six hits, including the homers and a triple by Dan Driessen.

Bill Madlock, the Cubs' third baseman, had his 17-game hitting streak stopped when he left the game in the second inning complaining of a muscle spasm in his lower back. He grounded out in the fourth when he smashed a bases-loaded triple to right center. Larson got his fourth run batted in in the eighth when he singled. The victory gave Larson a 3-4 mark.

AT PHILADELPHIA — Dan Larson, a rookie pitcher, held the powerful Phillies to five hits and won his own game by driving in four runs. Larson, a 22-year-old making his seventh start for the Astros since being recalled from the minors, broke a 1-1 tie in the fourth when he smashed a bases-loaded triple to right center. umpires' calls that he claims cost the Yankees the game. Sometimes he closets himself in the trainers' room to brood, taking comfort in a steam bath.

"When we get beat, I unwind about four hours later, and maybe not even then," he said. "If it's a really tough ball game, I like to go in for a sauna and calm down."

Friday night, after the Yankees dropped one to the California Angels at the Stadium, 5-3, the clubhouse was like the lobby of a funeral parlor. Players talked quietly among themselves or sat and stared, picking over the post game watermelon and fried chicken. A cake for Graig Nettles's 32d birthday went untouched.

Martin took credit for the scene. "The first time you get real gay about losing, you're going to lose all 162 games you play," he said. "That's why that clubhouse is quiet—a thing called pride."

He also had some harsh words about a call by Bill Deegan, the first-base umpire on Friday night, on a ball hit down the right field line by Dan Briggs of California in the seventh inning. The ball, close to the line, was called fair by Deegan, and the hit became a ground-rule double and led to two Angel runs.

Martin, naturally, thought it was foul and he got some rare agreement from Briggs. "The way I looked at it, it was fair," said Briggs, a 23-year-old outfielder who could have aborted Diogenes's search for an honest man had he lived in Conahatch 2,300 years ago. "It looked like it hit outside the foul line, but it might have caught the edge. It was hard to see."

"You get beat, it's bad enough," said Martin. "You get beat by a foul ball, it's ridiculous."

Locklear a Yankee With Unusual Past, Future

He has continued painting, working when he has time during the season but leaving most of his work for the winter.

"During the season I paint with acrylics because they dry quicker," he said. "I use oils in winter. Oils are better because they don't dry as fast and you can work with them longer."

Locklear did perhaps his most prolific work two winters ago when he turned out 26 paintings of Pete Rose in action plus a collage of baseball stars for Rose's restaurant in Cincinnati. Among his other baseball works are a painting of Henry Aaron, which he gave to the home run king, and a painting depicting Yogi Berra arguing with an umpire.

Big Future Work

"I devote a lot of time in the winter to painting because this is what I want to get into when I get out of baseball," the 5-foot-11-inch, 170-pound Yankee said. "I like to paint things that people ask me for. That way it isn't like going to a gallery and picking out what you like. It turns out to be more pleasing, I think, both for me and the person buying the painting. I'm doing something that somebody wants and they're getting what they want.

"I've developed by own techniques and I have my own way of expressing myself. By looking at my work, people can tell what kind of person I am. I don't want to paint like somebody else just to make money or become known. I want to be myself rather than copy someone else's style. It's harder work, but it's more rewarding."

In the offseason, Locklear works at his studio in Pembroke, where he lives with his mother, among the Lumbee Indians. The Lumbees used to be Cherokees, but the government changed their designation to avoid confusion with the Cherokees who live in the northwestern part approximately 1,000 people attended a dinner in his honor.

"I'm the only professional baseball player and the only professional artist who comes from my community," he said. "At the age of 27, from where I come from, I've accomplished a lot."

Panel of U.S. Olympic Experts Starts Drugs Study Designed to Aid Athletes

we're going to do now is tell the athletes everything they want to know or need to know and let them make a judgement on what they feel is important to them."

Dardik said medicine is likely to assume an even greater role in future international sports competition, an opinion that is shared by Dr. John Anderson, another member of the U.S.O.C. medical staff.

Impact of Medicine

"It's become a medical Olympics," Anderson said, referring to the elaborate testing procedures adopted under doping control. "Twenty-five percent of our time in Montreal was spent on trying to explain to athletes all the details of the tests and the drugs that they could and couldn't take. It's gone too far."

Anderson cited the case of Mac Wilkins, the Olympic discus champion, as an example of the inconsistencies in doping control. Wilkins was tested twice for steroids—the day he arrived at the Olympic Village and the day after his competition—but was never tested by the International Olympic Committee in their routine-post-event procedures.

"I don't blame Wilkins for being upset about this," Anderson said. "An athlete can become bewildered over why he's being called so often. It doesn't make too much sense."

The random steroid tests in Montreal were conducted by the various sports federations. Anderson conceded that the emphasis was geared to weight-type events.

Dardik believes the panel will provide a resource unit for athletes. At the United States Olympic track and field trials, in Eugene, Ore., 23 athletes failed the doping control test.

Most of the positive results were attributed to pills for hay fever and allergy-related symptoms brought on by a high pollen count. Dardik stressed the need for a consistent policy in the future at all national championships and American trials.

"We've got to prepare our athletes the same way they would be treated at an Olympics," Dardik said.

Dardik realizes that the panel will be on the spot in view of the publicity over drugs and the private theories surrounding the gold-medal performances of some European athletes in Montreal.

"This is not—I repeat—not, going to be a committee that is being formed to take the heat off," he said. "I'm prepared to do whatever the athletes want to help them for Moscow. But we want to do it so that the athletes understand each step along the way."

Willye White in July after failing to make Olympic team. She long-jumped in the five previous Games.

Dardik said steroids would particularly aid athletes that deal with muscle-building. Tests with animals could be used, along with specifically controlled programs for athletes, at their wishes.

Steroids are chemical compounds that have been declared illegal for Olympic competition. Three major classifications have become popularized under the adrenal series—cortisone, aldosterone and androgens. Naturally occurring chemicals such as testosterone reportedly also have been developed that skirt Olympic testing procedures.

A number of athletes, including one American weightlifter, Mark Cameron, were disqualified in Montreal because of positive steroid test results. In 1972, an asthmatic United States swimmer, Rick DeMont, was forced to return a gold medal because tracing of the drug ephedrine showed up in his urinalysis.

Another source of medical and ethical debate in Montreal was blood doping. Under this program developed in several Scandinavian countries, an athlete gives up a pint of blood at a prescribed time, the blood is preserved while the athlete continues high-level training and then is injected back into his system at a prescribed period before his competition.

Lasse Viren of Finland, who won the 10,000 and 5,000-meter gold medals for a second consecutive time in Montreal, became the focus of most of the blood-doping rumors. However, Viren denied knowledge of the procedure although it remains legal.

"I want the athletes to talk to us," Dardik said. "If a marathon runner like Frank Shorter believes blood-doping is a major source of inquiry, was the reason he lost in the Olympics, I want him to tell us. Then we can start researching this and tell Frank what we've found."

Can such an ambitious undertaking become functional enough to have any impact for Moscow?

"If anyone can make it happen, Irv Dardik can," said Willye White, a five-time United States Olympic long jumper. "This is the kind of program we've needed for a long time. If the U.S.O.C. lets Dardik operate, there's no telling how far we could go."

After a three-hour session with Miller, and further discussions with other U.S.O.C. medical officials, Dardik is convinced the program can work.

didn't believe in it," he said. "I don't like to lose; I don't think our athletes like it; and I know the American public has the best interest of our athletes at heart."

BECOME AN OVERPROTECTIVE PARENT.

If there's one time your children should be protected from life's hard knocks, it's when you're traveling along the highway at 55 m.p.h. Which is why more and more thinking parents choose to travel in the security of a Volvo wagon.

Volvo has crumple zones which collapse at a predetermined rate to help absorb the impact of a collision. The passengers are surrounded by a strong, protective cage formed by box steel pillars.

Even the U.S. government is impressed by Volvo's safety characteristics. In fact, they're buying 24 Volvos for a crash-testing program which will help establish safety standards for cars of the future.

Volvo also has other things to add to your sense of security. Rack and pinion steering to help you steer clear of trouble.

Power disc brakes on all four wheels, instead of just two. A quick, responsive fuel-injected overhead cam engine. 3-point seat belts front and rear. And childproof rear door locks to keep the kids in their place.

So come in and look at our Volvo wagons.

You'll not only be getting a big wagon to carry your worldly possessions.

You'll be getting a safer wagon to carry your most valuable possessions of all.

U.S. World Cup Team Starts Colorado Training Tuesday

By ALEX YANNIS

The United States World Cup team, which hopes to bring prominence to this country in the world of soccer, will start training Tuesday in Colorado Springs for its games against Canada and Mexico next month.

Walt Chyzowych, the coach, has invited 24 players, all American citizens, and plans to invite a handful more at the conclusion of the North American Soccer League playoffs. Chyzowych said that part of the preparation would include a tour for a series of matches in Ecuador, Peru and Colombia.

The first World Cup qualifying match will be against Canada on Sept. 24 at Vancouver. The second will be against Mexico at Los Angeles on Oct. 3, before the team meets Mexico again at Puebla, Mexico, on Oct. 15. The last qualifying match will be against Canada at Seattle on Oct. 20. Two of the three countries will advance to the next round.

"I think we are going to have the best preparation of any team to represent this country in soccer," Chyzowych said. "We are going to have first-class facilities and most players will be quite fit from playing all summer."

Chyzowych, who also supervises the United States Soccer Federation's coaching school, the youth team and the Olympic team, came to the United States from the Ukraine when he was 8 years old. He played 48 times for the United States national team, was an all-American at Temple and coached Philadelphia Textile to a 128-37-13 won-lost-tied record.

At 39, Chyzowych is one of the more serious students of soccer and has been credited with several innovations in strategy and training methods by such well-known coaches as Detmar Cramer of West Germany and Kazimierz Gorski of Poland. "We have a lot of talent, and with a little experience together, I think we will do well," Chyzowych said. He added that coaches across the nation were cooperative in making their players available. Three players from the New York Cosmos were invited, but it is uncertain whether they will work with the squad or go on a tour with the Cosmos.

The list of the players invited: Goalkeepers — Arnold Mausser, Shep Messing and Alan Mayer. Defenders — Neil Cohen, Bob Smith, Werner Roth,

Globetrotters, 50 Years Old, Turn Eyes to China

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 21 (UPI) — With the bouncy American tune "Sweet Georgia Brown" filling the fortress on the edge of the Sahara desert and armed guards patrolling the walls above, the French Foreign Legion suddenly called a brief halt to the war in Algeria.

They had summoned the Harlem Globetrotters to a "command performance." The unusual setting for a basketball game in Sidi Bel Abbes, Algeria, in the mid-1950's was nothing new for "America's goodwill ambassadors in short pants."

In 1959, the Trotters brought home fur pelts and postage stamps as their only payment for performing in Nikita Khrushchev's Russia. They dribbled basketballs in bull rings in Spain, were received by three Popes and set an attendance record of 75,000 in Berlin's Olympic Stadium.

"Set Things Straight" Now celebrating their 50th anniversary, you would think the Harlem Globetrotters would be satisfied after conquering 94 nations and billions of people with laughter and their dippy-doodle basketball buffoonery. Not so. "I'd like to get into China for a short time," said Meadowlark Lemon, the "clown prince of basketball," now starting his 23d year with the Globetrotters. "In going behind the Iron Curtain in the past, I think we were able to show the people another side of what this country is all about. What me as a Black person is all about. In many cases people behind the Iron Curtain thought we were still in slavery, judging by some of the propaganda. "They thought we couldn't own a car or walk down a street and there were a lot of people who had heard bad things about this country that weren't necessarily true. We were able to set a lot of those things straight." Many things have changed since the Globetrotters played Union, Spain or wherever. Laughter is international. People don't laugh in Russian or French—they just laugh."

First Efforts Failed

The Globetrotters, who recently moved their company headquarters from Chicago to Los Angeles, are looking forward to their 51st season beginning in October under its new president, Stan Greeson, who has overseen operations of the team since 1972. Greeson said he was working on a project that would take the Globetrotters to China, although first efforts have failed.

"When the United States ping pong team went to China or four several years ago, I established contact by various means with all sports communications for the Republic of China headquartered in Peking," Greeson said.

"We were getting very close to the point where we were told it's simply a matter of a few weeks and the O.K. will be given and then we could make specific arrangements."

"Weeks passed and instead of an O.K. I got a letter from the head of the China sports agency from Peking saying very nicely that they made a determination that there were enough exchanges for awhile and they were not going forward with any new ones. "That was it. There was no recourse."

Greeson said the project was still alive and was heartened because of the popularity of basketball in China. "It's the only place on the face of the earth where the Globetrotters haven't played basketball," he said. "Supposedly, there isn't a city or village in China where there isn't a post and board and a basket. The Chinese are very much into basketball."

A's Suffer 5-2 Setback To Red Sox

BOSTON, Aug. 21 (UPI)—Reggie Cleveland and Tom Murphy combined to pitch a seven-hitter and Carl Yastrzemski and Cecil Cooper batted in two runs each today to lead the Boston Red Sox to a 5-2 victory over the Oakland A's.

The triumph was the second in a row for the Red Sox over the A's and further set back Oakland's chances of catching the Western Division Kansas City Royals.

Cleveland, raising his worst record to 7-6, gave up a first-inning homer to Don Baylor, but he was not in serious trouble again until he ninth when he allowed two-out double by Billy Williams and a single by Sal Landi. Murphy came on and gave up a run-scoring double to Gene Tenace before retiring Ken McMullen on a fly to left to end the game.

Cooper hit his 11th homer, the second off the loser, Dick Bosman, for the Red Sox's first run. Yastrzemski rove in the winning run in the fourth with the first of his two doubles. In the sixth, red Lynn and Yastrzemski ad consecutive, opposite eld doubles for Boston's fourth run, and in the seventh Cooper singled in Denny Oyle, who had doubled.

Mize Still Seeking Cooperstown Ticket

COLLINSVILLE, Ill., Aug. 21 (AP) — Johnny Mize is playing a waiting game. But he spends little of his time fretting over his prospects for eventual admission into baseball's Hall of Fame.

"When I got out of baseball, they put in a five-year waiting rule," said Mize, 63 years old, who in 1953 hit the last of his 359 major league home runs.

"Then, when I became ineligible for the regular vote by writers, they put in another five-year wait," he said. "Half of the time when I was eligible the vote was only every other year."

Mize, to become a member of the Hall of Fame, must now obtain — after two more years — a three-quarters vote of a 12-member veterans committee.

"They've Forgotten He's still annoyed by his failure to gain such recognition by a vote earlier among members of the Baseball Writers Association of America.

Rowdies Oust Cosmos

(Reprinted from yesterday's late editions.)

By ALEX YANNIS

Special to The New York Times

TAMPA, Aug. 20—There will be no championship laurels for Pelé and the New York Cosmos this year. They were eliminated from the North Soccer League playoffs tonight by the Tampa Bay Rowdies, who stood up to their name at times and won convincingly, 3-1.

Despite a strong defense, Pelé's hustling and Shep Messing's goalkeeping performance, the Cosmos were outsmarted, outrun and overwhelmed by a skillful Rowdie team that got the goals when the chances came.

Pelé scored the tying goal at 1-1, for the Cosmos, but he received little help from his teammates at the forward line. Gordon Bradley, the Cosmos' coach, substituted two of Pelé's partners in the second half to no avail.

The Rowdies, the defending league champions, delighted the 36,863 fans by playing solid soccer from the outset. They employed muscle when necessary and received no retaliation by the Cosmos. Perhaps that was the key point in the game, as Eddie Firmani, the Rowdies' coach, said afterward.

"We weren't marking as tight as we should at times," Firmani said. "My halftime speech was all about marking closer and letting them know we were there."

The Cosmos, and particularly Bradley, were unhappy with the officiating. The tie-breaking goal came when Pelé was on the ground. The Cosmos thought the referee, John Davies, had called a foul against Tampa Bay, but he had not, and the ball reached Stewart Scullion on the right side.

Scullion faked to his right, then to his left and blasted a shot past Messing that put the Rowdies ahead after Pelé had matched an earlier Rowdie goal by Derek Smethurst.

"My players didn't lose the game," Bradley said afterward. "The referee took it away from them."

How about the Rowdies' third goal, by Rodney Marsh, a mid fielder, he was asked. "The third goal wouldn't have come if they had not scored the tiebreaking goal," Bradley said.

Besides the disputed play, Pelé felt the Rowdies' presence more than any of the Cosmos. At one point, the Brazilian was kicked and stepped on in the same play. He didn't complain that time, but he did complain when the tiebreaking goal came

The Money Rolls In
Record attendance and betting figures continue to erode the old argument about Saratoga being a rich man's luxury that costs New York millions of dollars in lost permutual revenue.

With offtrack betting, New York City now makes more money when the horses are running upstate at the Spa than it does when they are back home at Aqueduct or Belmont Park. For the first 18 days of the 24-day meet, downstate offtrack bettors have wagered more than $2 million a day on Saratoga action. On some days, the OTB handle exceeds $2.5 million.

The message has not been lost on Paul Scervo, president of the Offtrack Betting Corporation. Scervo, on hand for the Travers, said he would like to see the Saratoga meeting extended in future years to six weeks.

OTB like to see closed-circuit television of Saratoga races at places like Radio City Music Hall. "And a six-week meeting upstate would justify a major expansion of facilities at Saratoga itself."

In racing's new OTB era, Saratoga draws nearly as many spectators as Aqueduct and Belmont. And the so-called "track in the country" does better than Monmouth Park, New Jersey track which much more accessible to New York City horsemen.

Going into Saturday's program, Saratoga had drawn more customers than Monmouth on 14 of the 17 days. And despite the presence of light-betting "sightseers" at Saratoga, the pari-mutuel handle at the upstate track exceeded Monmouth's on 10 of 17 days.

"People keep thinking Saratoga is a little old country track," a spokesman for the New York Racing Association said. "Actually, it's the fifth busiest track in the United States — after Aqueduct, Belmont, Hollywood Park and Santa Anita."

Attendance Is Strong
Counting the Travers Day figures the daily average attendance at Saratoga stands at 19,000. Aqueduct and Belmont have averaged 20,805 a day this year. In betting, the downstate track average is $2.8 million, the Saratoga average about $1.8 million. But the heavier off-track action on Saratoga helps narrow that gap. Total attendance for the first three weeks of the meeting is up 6 percent over last year and the betting is up 12 percent. One conclusion drawn by the N.Y.R.A. is that Sunday racing, introduced last year, wasn't worth the effort. Three Sunday programs were held in 1975, with the track closed on three Tuesdays.

Sunday action was dropped this year, and the schedule returned to a Monday-through-Saturday format. A Winning Pair
For Jolly and the Firestones, the runaway victory reprecise a second straight major Saturday success here. Last Saturday, Mrs. Firestone's Optimistic Gal won the Alabama Stakes for 3-year-old fillies by 16 lengths in stakes-record time. Today, it was the 3-year-old colt's turn.

And Honest Pleasure, last year's 2-year-old champion, finally ran the kind of overpowering race his backers had hoped he would run in both the Derby and Preakness. He was an odds-on favorite in those two Triple Crown races. But he wound up second in the Derby and fifth in the Preakness.

He skipped the Belmont, but he looked like the old Honest Pleasure today in the race they call the "Midsummer Derby." The big disappointment in the Travers was Majestic Light, the colt who finished six lengths ahead of Honest Pleasure two weeks ago in the 1 1/4-mile Monmouth Invitational. He beat only one horse today, falling completely to duplicate the late charge that had carried him to a track record in the Monmouth race.

One factor may have been the weights. Each of the contestants in the Travers carried 126 pounds, so Honest Pleasure didn't have to concede weight to anything.

Efforts Being Spawnd to Ensure Survival of Atlantic Salmon in Can

By NELSON BRYANT

BAIE-TRINITE, Quebec — Like a timorous mother, Canada is gingerly holding hands with the fascinating but potentially explosive problem of how to deal with the Atlantic salmon.

For fear that the above might be construed as sharp criticism of the Federal or Provincial Governments, it should be noted that the situation is an incredibly complex blend of tradition, greed, misinformation, misunderstanding and, in the case of sport angling, a growing feeling on the part of local people that they should have at least an equal opportunity with outsiders to fish for salmon.

There is probably no man in Canada more aware of the nuances of the problem than Wilfred Carter, executive director of the International Atlantic Salmon Foundation, a private, nonprofit group with headquarters in St. Andrews, New Brunswick. A professional fisheries biologist, Carter joined the foundation in 1969. He is ideal for the job. He is fluent in French as well as English, and his dedication to the salmon is coupled with a practical understanding of the interim compromises that must be accepted if the goal of insuring the species' survival is to be achieved.

The Supreme Fish

He is also, one must add, a splendid companion, fly fisherman, conversationalist and connoisseur of good food and wine. It was for these reasons and more that this writer accepted with alacrity an invitation to join Carter and Tom Blagden Jr., a young American photographer with the foundation, on a tour of some of the salmon rivers of the Gaspé and Quebec's north shore.

Going from town to town and river to river talking with anglers and town and government officials, one soon realizes that there is no quick route to proper management of the salmon in Canada.

Regarded by many as the supreme food and game fish, the Atlantic salmon has been battling for survival for many years. Once common in the larger rivers of New England as far south as the Connecticut, it now returns in limited numbers to a few streams in Maine. Dams and pollution, mostly the former, having blocked its upstream journey to spawning beds.

In Quebec and the maritime provinces, the salmon is still relatively abundant, although it is threatened with overexploitation, primarily by commercial fishing and poaching, from time to time. A few years ago the Atlantic salmon became an international cause célèbre when Danish fishing boats discovered the feeding grounds for salmon of many nations in the Davis Strait off Greenland. (Salmon are an anadromous fish, spawning in streams, with the young later descending to the sea to grow and mature, then to return to the place of their birth to repeat the cycle.)

In 1972, the Danes agreed

A fly fisherman on the Grand Trinité, a salmon river on the north shore of Quebec. Over-exploitation threatens the Atlantic salmon there.

to phase out their Davis Strait salmon fishery, and in the spring of that same year Canada declared a total ban on all commercial netting of salmon in New Brunswick and along the Gaspé Peninsula in Quebec.

A ban was also placed on the drift-net, or offshore, fishery in the Port-Aux-Basques area of Newfoundland, a fishery that had been intercepting salmon on their way back to the rivers of mainland Canada.

Cod-Net Permits
Salmon runs improved almost immediately in many rivers in Quebec and New Brunswick, and it seemed for a time as if much ground had been gained.

But after the ban on commercial salmon netting was instituted (and the former netters were being compensated for not fishing), the fisheries branch of the Department of Commerce and Industry in Quebec began issuing permits for fishermen to set cod nets along the shore, and salmon were permitted as an incidental catch. It is Carter's educated guess that the total take of salmon by these gill nets now equals the former commercial harvest of the species by bonafide salmon netters.

"Control of the commercial salmon fishing in Quebec," Carter said, "was placed under the Department of Tourism, Fish and Game in 1968, and this, I believe, resulted in a certain amount of resentment by the Department of Industry and Commerce.

What they are doing in issuing these cod permits is, I feel, a deliberate attempt to circumvent the ban on commercial salmon fishing. They've been handing out these permits with reckless abandon. The effectiveness of the ban has been lost and something else needs to be done.

In 1971 on the Gaspé there were 2,060 of these permits issued. In 1975, the figure was 3,543.

Carter would like to see it become law in Canada that salmon could only be bought or sold through licensed vendors who would keep complete records of the transactions. Under the present setup it is, for example, very difficult to have a truly accurate count of how many fish are being caught or sold. Rod-caught fish cannot be legally sold, by the way.

Newfoundland Is Problem

The Newfoundland commercial fishery for salmon is another thorny problem, for that province accounts for about 80 percent of the total Canadian salmon catch, both commercial and sporting. Canada's average annual salmon catch over the last 20 years has varied from 4 1/2 million to 6 million pounds.

"The Newfoundland fishery, where the industry is obviously very important," says Carter, "is very sensitive. Commercial fishermen there are enraged by any suggestion of restrictions." Newfoundland salmon fishermen and others were undoubtedly pleased by the recent announcement of the Canadian Government's intention to institute a 200-mile zone next year, within which foreign fishing vessels would not be allowed. But the Newfoundland fishery continues to take a substantial portion of salmon headed back to Nova Scotia, Quebec and New Brunswick rivers as well as some bound for Maine. (This has been verified by recapture of tagged fish.)

Because salmon return unerringly to the rivers of their birth, it is Carter's contention that the only logical way to fish commercially for the species is in the mouth of a given stream. A salmon biol-ogist's rule of thumb says that if normal numbers of salmon are returning to the stream, one-third may be taken by sport fishing, one-third by netters and the other third allowed upstream to spawn. The ideal salmon runs where many rivers are already known and it is a simple matter to arrange for mechanical or electronic counting of them at a weir or dam as they begin their upstream journey.

Limiting commercial fishing of salmon to the river itself is the only way to insure proper management of that river's stock, and it also does away with situations where one province or one nation is taking fish that were spawned elsewhere. This technique is being used in a few rivers in Ireland and Scotland.

One must also mention that poaching is on the increase in many rivers, and there have been some nasty confrontations between wardens and poachers in recent months. The increased numbers of fish that began to reach the rivers after the netting ban was imposed helped to trigger this, as did the rise and the value of salmon. A poacher can get nearly $2 a pound for salmon in some areas of Canada.

There is also the problem, in some areas, of native Indians taking more fish than the quota established for them, and the Government moves delicately in this sensitive area.

Sportfishing for salmon also has its complications.

Many salmon rivers are controlled by private interests, whether clubs or individuals, either by outright ownership of the stream bed or the land along it, or by lease from the Government. There are also many places where an outfitter leases salmon waters from the Government.

Truly excellent Atlantic salmon fishing has been, for the most part, a sport of kings or the wealthy, but the tradition in Canada has been blurring slowly over the years as more streams, or sections of them, were turned over to public fishing. The Matane on the Gaspé, for example, has been public for more than a decade. Some other Quebec rivers also public, or partially so, are the St. Arme, the Dartmouth, the Madeleine, the York and the St. Jean. The salmon rivers on Anticosti Island in the Gulf of St. Lawrence are open to the public and run by the Government, and there are rivers on the north shore of Quebec that are all or partially public. (Rates vary enormously, from a few dollars a day for wading anglers without guide to more than a $1,000 a week for food, lodging, boat and guides.) There is, in effect, something for everyone, although it cannot be denied that, in general, the quality of the fishing rises proportionately with the cost.

Good Intentions Noted

The aforementioned St. Jean on the Gaspé is a good example of a well-managed river, as is the St. Arme. Carter, Blagden and I had a bit of fishing on the St. Anne within the Gaspésie provincial park where we chatted with Francois de B. Road America Will Conduct Handicap Race Next Sunday

By PHIL PASH

In two years, Road America in Elkhart Lake, Wis., has established a reputation for novel races in August.

Last year, it was the Road America 252 (miles) Handicap, a special group of cars made an on-track start, just like the start of a regular race. At various intervals after that, faster cars were started from the pit lane, giving them time (equals distance) handicaps to overcome.

The race was won by Vern Schuppan of Australia in a Mirage-Ford, which ran in the 24 hours of LeMans in 1974. It was the ideal car for the event, with good acceleration and top speed and superb handling in the corners, and it was a runaway winner.

Cliff Tuft, the Road America founder-president, liked his brainchild so much that he will have another handicap race next Sunday, but it will be different from last August's show in several ways.

Regular Race Saturday
First of all, it will be restricted to Formula 5000 cars, and they actually will have two races on the weekend instead of their customary heat and feature races. Here's how it will work:

Next Saturday the 5000 cars will compete in a regular series race of 80 miles for championship points and a $25,000 purse. Because of the tight battle for the season championship, with only 4 points separating Alan Jones, Jackie Oliver and Brian Redman, that could be a better race than the handicap.

On Sunday the handicap race will be staged for a $40,000 purse, but no points.

Finishing positions from Saturday, qualifying times and other data from the weekend and from the previous 5000 visit to Road America in July—will be used to determine the handicaps for the cars.

Just as last year, there will be an on-track start, with the faster cars joining the chase from the pit lane. Unlike last year, however, the 5000 cars all have essentially the same engine, they weigh the same and their performance should be pretty close to the same.

Therefore, the handicaps won't be as great. Some cars received almost 10 minutes last year; tops this year probably will be about 4-5 minutes, which at Road America will translate into two laps or so.

"We're doing two races," explained Tuft, "because it wouldn't be fair to handicap drivers who are running for the championship. If we had just one race, and Brian Redman had, say, a four-minute handicap, it wouldn't be fair to his chances of winning the race so he could stay in contention for the championship."

Two other reasons, according to Tuft, are it should bolster his overall weekend program (which he hopes will bolster the crowds), and the handicap race will give the "also-rans" a chance to collect some of the big cash they generally miss.

"The guys who aren't in the running for the season title are the ones who are really enthused about the handicap event, because they feel they have a chance to win," said Tuft. "They believe that, with a minute or two head start on the front runners, they will have a good shot."

After five events, Jones and Oliver are tied for the points lead with 84, with Redman standing third at 80. Jones, however, may have to miss the race because of a previous commitment to drive in another race that weekend.

He has won the 5000 races at Watkins Glen and Mosport, Redman won at Pocono and Mid-Ohio and Oliver won at Road America.

"It will be a real test for the Formula 5000 cars and drivers," said Tuft, "because they will be racing on successive days, and they haven't done that before. Their normal procedure is to run a heat race and a feature race on the same day, but I think this will be a little tougher."

One Set of Remains in

The Bucky brothers' act was broken up last week when the Jets cut Dave, the quarterback, while retaining the other twin, Don, the wide receiver. Are there any twin brothers playing Football in the National Pro Football League? Yes, and one was in the news last week. The Houston Oilers traded Ronald Reed Saul, a guard to the Washington Redskins for three of George Allen's future draft choices, one in 1977, one in 1978 and one in 1979.

Ron's twin, Richard Robert (Rich) Saul, is the starting center for the Los Angeles Rams and is not about to be traded. The Saul brothers played together, sometimes side by side, in high school at Butler, Pa., and in college at Michigan State.

The N.F.L. draft separated them in 1970 when Houston picked Ron on the fifth round and the Rams took Rich in the eighth.

A longtime regular, Ron lost his starting position to Conway Hayman, but he most certainly will start in Washington because Allen did not have any healthy experienced guards.

Ron, who had been playing out his option, said he had been with the Oilers for six seasons and it was time to move on. He can figure on a raise in pay with the Redskins unless Allen has run out of funds.

That new team in the American Conference is not Tampa but Tampa Bay. When the Buccaneers were playing the Green Bay Packers in Milwaukee recently, the scoreboard read "Tampa." "That's all right," said Curt Mosher, a Buccaneer executive. "When they come down to play us, we'll call them Green."

What They Are Saying

Larry Bowa, Phillies' shortstop, tells the technician before X-rays are taken on an injured ankle: "I'm 0 for 3 in this room [three previous fractures] and I better leave here for 1 for 4 or I'll break the machine." The X-rays were negative.

Dave Stockton, who won the Professional Golfers' Association title, irked when play was stopped two straight days by midafternoon thunderstorms: "Why don't they just start us at 7 in the morning and let them tape it for television?"

Fred Stanley, Yankee shortstop, after hitting his first homer in three years: "The toughest thing was not to smile when I was running the bases. You don't want to be out there laughing. I was trying to keep a straight face and get to the dugout as quickly as possible."

Johnny Russo, a Cosmos' reserve, on how it feels to practice every day and never play in a game: "It's frustrating. It's like dating a girl every night for three months and not getting anywhere."

Pete Rose, after the Reds lost four games in a row: "If you're looking for excuses, you might blame it on the road trip [13 games in two weeks]. We played three day games in Chicago and two in New York, which means getting up early."

Elrod Hendricks, Yankee catcher, on Catfish Hunter's somewhat disappointing 14-12 win-loss record: "What do they expect for $3 million? Perfection?"

More Perilous Than Jaws or Claws Is the Serpent's Tooth

PETER STOLER

Recent horror movies to the contrary notwithstanding, swimmers off Amnsett are far more likely to be struck by meteorites than they are to be eaten by 25-foot great white sharks. Camping in national parks are equally unlikely to be devoured by 18-foot grizzly bears. But before the summer is over, many of the nation's growing number of backpackers and hikers, whether pursuing their pleasure along a Big Bend of the Rio Grande or a litter-lined trail of Bear Mountain, N.Y., will encounter a more homely yard than either jaws or claws—snakes.

No one knows for sure how many Americans are bitten by poisonous snakes each year; unlike gunshot wounds or communicable diseases, snakebites need not be reported by physicians. But the estimates are impressive. According to Sports Illustrated, which bases its estimate on medical reports from the Southwest, up to 100 Americans are bitten by rattlesnakes alone each year, and as many as 30 die as a result. An estimated 100 are bitten by other venomous species, though with no reported fatal results.

The irony is that both the incidence and the outcome of most of these encounters between man and snake are preventable. Many, perhaps even most, snakebite victims will be bitten because they have failed to take the most elementary precautions to protect themselves.

Most of those who will die will succumb because they have neither the knowledge nor the equipment to deal with snakebite. For in spite of the increasing popularity of such outdoor sports as wilderness camping and canoeing, relatively few people bother to learn about snakes, much less prepare to deal with them. Of the thousands who spend large sums on Abercrombie & Fitch sleeping bags, L. L. Bean boots or Kelty packs, only a handful spend a few extra dollars to buy snakebite kits. Indeed, most people—outdoorsmen included—still approach the subject of snakebite with a mixture of fear and fantasy, relying, in most cases, on folk remedies or obsolete information, including the time-honored belief that one must make cross-shaped cuts before beginning to draw the poison out of any puncture, an idea that most physicians now do not recommend.

What can the backpacker do to protect himself against snakes? Well, as the first step in any program of self-preservation, he should recognize their existence and learn to live with their presence.

Snakes are among North America's most common creatures, with some 200-plus species in the United States and Canada. Most of these, like the common garter snake and the red-and-black-striped rainbow snake, are harmless to man; some, like the six-foot-long, rat-eating black racer, are actively beneficial. But a number are hazardous. The "Field Book of Snakes of the United States and Canada" lists 52 species of snakes that are poisonous, 36 of them dangerously so.

The rarest of these—and the most attractive—is the coral snake. A small species—it ranges in length from 23 to 47 inches—the coral can be found from coastal North Carolina south through Florida and throughout the Gulf States to the southwestern desert.

The longest recorded specimen of an eastern diamondback, the largest of the rattlesnakes, measured 8 feet 9 inches.

Rattlesnakes have long folding fangs that are as sharp as hypodermic needles. They bite an estimated 3,200 Americans a year, injecting up to a teaspoonful of venom in a fraction of a second.

The cottonmouth moccasin can be found in swampy areas like the Okefenokee and the Everglades. As its name suggests, the inside of its mouth is a startling white.

England's Wild White Cattle

EDMUND MORRIS

the peaceful loving of a herd of wild white cattle. You pause in your equestrian stroll down the lanes of eastern Cheshire and gaze over the hedge at the meadows which curve, sweet and green, around Chillingham Castle. There, just where the setting sun has made the grass glow like hot emeralds, is a herd of about 80 head. They chew the cud lazily, swinging their tails in approved bovine fashion. Then you notice something strange. Can they be—you peer more closely—surely they're not . . . white?

Chillingham is six miles southeast of the little gray market town of Wooler, about halfway between Newcastle and Edinburgh. Most travelers visit it en route to, or coming south from, Scotland's "Scott Country" (Lammermuir). Their motive is the same as that of pilgrims to Loch Ness: a fascination with the prehistoric throwbacks that still lurk in odd corners of the British Isles.

Whistling an invitation to the stray foxhound who decided to keep you company a mile or so back, you heave yourself over the stile and start trudging up the hill toward those pale and placid creatures. Since the incline is a bit steep, your head bows down as your legs pump upward; you do not notice that strange things are happening above you. The cattle are grouping into a tight formation, cows in front, calves in the middle, bulls behind, and a particularly hefty-looking specimen in the rear. A pause, and suddenly 30 tons of beef is speeding your way, at about 40 miles an hour. You have just time to note, before disappearing under the first relay of hoofs, that these extraordinary cattle are indeed white—as white as driven snow . . .

Actually it's not human beings the Wild White Cattle of Chillingham object to—they tolerate at least 10,000 sightseers a year—it's that stray foxhound, which stirs up terrifying ancestral memories.

EDMUND MORRIS is a writer who lives in New York.

The castle itself is a 14th-century structure on the seaward-facing slopes of the Cheviot Hills. To view the cattle, simply park your car at the nearby church, knock on the door of the cottage opposite and buy a couple of tickets (about 35 cents each) from the warden. If he's not having his "elevenses," or "lounch," or "high tea," or any other of the mysterious feasts which interrupt the rural English day, he will pull on a pair of Wellington boots and escort you to wherever the herd is grazing.

Note that he always approaches from downwind. The cattle are philosophical about tourists and are, on the whole, as tranquil as any of their domesticated brethren, but whiffs of Arpege and Old Spice do not agree with them. Should the wind change, you'll see them instinctively move away. About the only living thing that does bother them, and cause the frightening reaction described above, is the foxhound. The warden will explain why; but in case you have diffi-

Letters: In Defense Of Colleges as Hotels

To the Editor:

I was dismayed by Robert I. Dunphy's article (Travel Section, Aug. 1) on the hotel industry's response to colleges that rent rooms to tourists. Many Scandinavian universities operate "summer hotels" in their dormitories, and they are delightful. Knowledgeable, helpful student managers and low-cost rooms with breakfast made these dorms our favorite stopping places in Sweden.

Why not in America? Not all tourists want or need TV and toilets in their bedrooms, so why pay for these luxuries? As for the question of competition, I think the argument is specious. More colleges face bankruptcy every year. Any opportunity to turn unused facilities into income will help them keep afloat financially. If summer dormitory rentals help to slow the rise of tuition costs (and the inevitable need for tax-supported subsidies), they should be welcomed.

I hope all colleges and universities will soon join the ranks of those who help themselves by helping travelers. Europe has evolved several practices that would stimulate domestic travel if they were adopted here. Summer hotels on college campuses and ubiquitous tourist information offices are two of Europe's most useful services. These ideas may never reach full fruition in the United States if greedy hoteliers can't be held at bay.

LEE N. MILLER
Staten Island, N.Y.

To the Editor:

It was disheartening to learn from the "Notes" column that two Vermont colleges have partially surrendered to the "tourist" with respect to use of their dormitories—dormitory facilities. The not-so-affluent traveler who either cannot or unwilling to remain in the area at least five days no longer will be eligible for the moderately priced accommodations hitherto available without any such restriction. Clearly a mutual need was being met by providing ready access to what otherwise would be unproductive facilities. Colleges, as can be gathered from increasing tuition fees, have had difficulty in making ends meet. They can supply a service to persons of modest means—those not concerned with frills as the swimming pools in hotels advertise—they deserve encouragement, not censure. Vermont Gov. Thomas P. Salmon was probably trying to placate motel operators when he said it was not the intent of his administration to be in competition with private enterprise in the hospitality industry but his use of the term "competition" could be a bit wide of the mark.

Shouldn't he be praising the colleges, instead, for supplementing the housing situation for transients? Increased travel volume is a boon to local shopkeepers, restaurant owners and many other area enterprises.

THOMAS G. MORGANSEN
Queens

To the Editor:

Our sympathy for the motel and restaurant operators vis-a-vis the college dormitories offering cheap housing for travelers is minimal. The motel and restaurant people, by setting their prices at what the affluent are willing to pay, have priced themselves out of the market for many ordinary tourists. Those of us with family or friends at opposite ends of the country who want to visit them find the motel-and-restaurant route too expensive by far.

We sent for the book "Mort's Guide to Low-Cost Vacations and Lodgings on College Campuses" ($3.75 at C.M.G. Publications, P.O. Box 630, Princeton, N.J. 08540) and think it's an excellent idea. There is no practical reason why such facilities, tax-supported or not, should remain idle and empty when use could be made of them.

We dislike having to pay for elaborate appointments, television and swimming pools and all the rest when we don't need them or want them. We suspect that a nationwide chain of motels providing simple, neat, comfortable lodging at minimum prices, without all the frills, could do well enough; this should be available, in any case. And we do not care to be charged for a meal twice as big as we need or want, which is the going thing at most "good" restaurants, when half as much, at half the price, would do very well. But have you ever asked for a half-serving of a $7.95 dinner for $4 in one of these eateries for the affluent?

We hope to be able to continue to travel in the years remaining to us, and on our limited income. But if we are to do so, alternative ways to the motel-and-restaurant route as now constituted must continue to be available to us.

BOB ATHEARN
Middlebury, Vt.

[The American Hotel & Motel Association replies: The writers seem to ignore the plight of the small businessman and taxpayers in general. Their only concern seems to be that colleges and universities can offer lower-priced accommodations than innkeepers who must make a profit. Unquestionably, colleges and universities can offer lodging and meals at lower prices than those innkeepers charge, but this is only because most colleges benefit from Government subsidies and do not need to show a profit. And the readers do not seem to recognize that they, as taxpayers, are helping to pick up the tab for these subsidies.]

Hardest hit by this sort of unfair competition is the smaller independent hotel and motel owner. If such privately owned hotels and motels lose enough business to these public-subsidized tax-exempt institutions, they will be forced to close their doors. This will mean a loss of jobs—and higher unemployment—in surrounding communities. The shuttered hotels and motels will stop paying taxes as well, thereby boosting taxes for local residents.

What's more, the writers seem to share the erroneous impression that hotels and motels cater to the affluent. Not so. Privately owned United States hotels and motels offer a wide variety of accommodations over a broad price range. And the budget or economy inns —motel without frills—represent a growing segment of this industry. We would be happy to send you readers a list of budget motels if they would send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to American Hotel & Motel Association, 888 Seventh Avenue, New York 10019. As to restaurants, a number of have begun offering smaller portions at lower prices to those who prefer them.]

TUBING

To the Editor:

Stan and Shirley Fischler's article, "Tubing Takes Hold" (Travel Section, Aug. 8) brought back memories of another tubing experience, one that took place just outside of Thunder Bay, Ontario, where we lived during 1974-75.

There, one goes to a tubing ground where he or she can rent inner-tubes of varying sizes and then slide down an ice-covered embankment, bouncing off the sides en route to the frozen Kaministikwa River. Then one lets out one's breath and watches out for oncoming tubers. The tubes are pulled up on a rope tow. It's a thrilling experience and all ages can participate. Our 4-year-old daughter just loved it.

Notes: Free Vacations For High Rollers

By STANLEY CARR

Free air transportation plus free hotel rooms and meals in vacation resorts are available to gamblers—provided they have plenty of money to wager. Casinos in the Caribbean, Las Vegas and Monte Carlo will pick up the gamblers' tabs because it pays them to entertain high rollers who are prepared to lose at the tables. If the gambler gets lucky, he flies home with his winnings, and no bills.

Several organizations that specialize in casino junkets regularly arrange free packages for serious gamblers, drawing a commission from the casinos and sometimes a service fee of about $25 from their clients as well. To qualify, one must be an established gambler with a good credit rating or else deposit a sizable amount of cash with which to gamble. Those taking part in free junkets are usually expected to place minimum bets of about $25 and to patronize the blackjack, dice or roulette tables for three hours or so a night. Slow players generally find that their names are put on a "not to be invited again" list by casino personnel.

Apart from the trips arranged by junket organizers, some hotels with casinos, including the Americana in San Juan, Puerto Rico, and Aruba, El San Juan and El Conquistador in Puerto Rico, Loews Monte Carlo and several in Las Vegas, offer free flights, accommodations and meals to gamblers whose financial standing has been carefully checked out. "There are certain high-caliber players who have established good reputations in other casinos," says an official of Loews Monte Carlo, "for whom we will make special arrangements."

One junket operator who runs trips for gamblers to both Loews Monte Carlo and the Americana in San Juan is Sy Zemsky, president of the Executive Club (2380 Hempstead Turnpike, East Meadow, L.I., tel.: 516-735-6070). His monthly trips attract 20 or 25 "qualified players" for whom he has asked the casinos to establish a credit line. They are given free hotel accommodations, meals and beverages, and gamblers with top credit ratings and reputations get free air fare as well.

A credit line of $5,000 is not unusual for gamblers participating in Executive Club trips, and the players either settle up on leaving the casino or after returning to New York. "The serious gambler," says Mr. Zemsky, "is going to play the tables whether his expenses are picked up or not. When he is on a free trip, he and his wife are treated royally by the casino."

The wives or companions of his players also become the guests of the casinos, but they are provided with air tickets only if their men are leading high rollers with iron-clad credentials.

Trips to the Caribbean or Las Vegas are usually for four or five days, those to Monte Carlo a week, but one operator, Bahama Casino Tours (1333 Seventh Avenue, New York 10019, tel.: 212-586-7310), runs mini-junkets to Freeport that last about 12 hours. Participants, who must buy $700 worth of chips on arrival at Freeport's El Casino, take off in a chartered DC-9 at Kennedy Airport around 6:30 P.M. on Fridays and eat a steak dinner and drink from an open bar during the flight, according to Tom Trzanowski, who escorts the trips. After gambling, the players cash in their chips and leave on the return flight at about 4:30 A.M. Saturday. They pay the tour company a $25 seat-reservation fee but the round-trip flight is free.

Bahama Casino Tours also runs Thursday-to-Sunday junkets every month to the Castle Harbour Hotel Casino in St. John's, Antigua. The gamblers, who must deposit $1,500 as betting money before departure, get a free round-trip flight with a commercial airline and free rooms, meals and drinks at the hotel. "They must play $25 minimums and turn over [bet] $500 a day," says Mr. Trzanowski.

Junkets to the casino at the Holiday Inn in Aruba in the Dutch West Indies are operated about once a month by Island Casino Tours (35 East Wacker Drive, Chicago 60601, tel.: 312-726-6858). Five nights' accommodations are free along with air fare from Chicago, meals and drinks. "The players must have a minimum credit line of $3,500 and put all the money in action—win, lose or draw," says the organizer.

Other operators that run free trips for serious gamblers include: Viking International Travel Tours, 130 West 42d Street, New York 10036 for you to cast it out a few yards, which is all you need.

When you feel ready to start casting in earnest, you, or any child of 6, can learn to do it creditably with the closed-face reel in five minutes. Its secret is a large pushbutton: You attach a lure to your line in place of a bobber and hook, you swing the rod toward its target, push the button and your lure sails off. To retrieve, you simply take your thumb off the button and reel in.

If you do decide to get some casting lures, you'll have to throw yourself on the mercy of the tackle-store salesman, and I can report that is a fairly safe thing to do. A couple of clerks I eavesdropped on recently confirmed my belief that they are almost always knowledgeable fishermen and endlessly patient with the neophyte's questions if the store isn't crowded.

You'll be overwhelmed by the variety of lures: plastic worms that you crawl along the bottom; spoons and spinners (with or without feathers) that are retrieved at various depths; floating plugs and poppers that stay on the surface. You'll need a couple of each type and a compartmental plastic box to carry them in. I'd suggest you also get a practice casting plug—unlike the lures, they're hookless, and with one you can learn to cast on the nearest patch of grass.

If you are fortunate enough to have a friend who fishes, the next step is to inveigle him into taking you out to the nearest pond for a day. He can be a big help in teaching you the fundamentals—how to string a worm on a hook; how to tie the hook to your line. Nearby Lakes

Almost every community has a pond where the beginner can catch something, from sunfish to bass. The New York metropolitan area has a number of lakes suitable for the beginner, including some within all five boroughs. Manhattan's Central Park Lake and Brooklyn's Prospect Park Lake have boats for rent. The Bronx has Van Cortlandt Park Lake, and Staten Island and Queens have several. All have fish.

To mention just a few spots near New York, there's the lake in Branch Brook Park, right in the middle of Newark. Farther north, on U.S. 9W above Nyack, is Rockland Lake in Hook Mountain Park. Or take the Taconic State Parkway up into Westchester to try the fishing on the lake in Mohanic State Park. There you'll be near the reservoirs—Croton, Amawalk, Cross River, Titicus— that provide not only the city's water but some of the best bass and trout fishing around. On Long Island there's Valley Stream State Park, lying between Merrick Road and the Southern State Parkway; the Hempstead Reservoir on the Southern State; the lake in Belmont State Park, and dozens of others all the way to Montauk, which has a couple of good bass lakes.

The Department of Environmental Conservation publishes a folder, "Fishing," that shows state parks and public fishing streams in the state and gives the elaborate rules on what fish can be taken where and when. It is available by calling D.E.C. regional offices (listed under New York State in the phone book) or by writing Publications Distributions Unit, New York State Department of Environmental Conservation, 50 Wolf Road, Albany, N.Y. 12233. Your regional office can also suggest some likely local fishing holes.

Fishing licenses are mandatory for anyone over 16. They are inexpensive ($6.25 for New York residents) and available at many tackle shops and at State Environmental Conservation offices. Licenses aren't required for saltwater fishing. —B.R.

won't hold.) What's needed is a jam knot. Run the line through the eye of the hook, wrap the short end around the line four times (six if you're conservative) and put the end back through the loop you created at the eye. Pull both ends of the line until the knot is jammed tight against the hook.

Lacking an angler friend, get an inexpensive book that covers the basics—some of the kits include one. If some points aren't clear—and they probably won't be—drop in at the tackle store and ask for help. Herman's, the sporting goods chain (tel.: 212-565-6400), has seminars on fishing in several suburban locations every year, and well-known fishermen give casting demonstrations occasionally in Abercrombie's rooftop pool.

Some people suspect that fishing will bore them, but few consider that there is a small element of danger to it. Paul Richards, Herman's fishing tackle buyer, feels the neophyte should be aware of this, particularly if he is taking his youngsters out. "If you're going in a boat, everyone who can't swim should wear a life jacket," he says. Also, "A summer sun bouncing off water can sear you unless you are protected by clothes and a hat, and insect repellent is a necessity."

Every so often a fisherman instead of a fish is caught by the hook. In that regard I can offer a suggestion: Before you go fishing take pliers and press down on the barbs on all your hooks. A hook in your skin or your shirt will then pull out with a minimum of trauma, and you'll also be able to release fish you don't intend to eat (a laudable action) much more easily. Experienced trout fishermen say you'll be able to catch just as many fish on such a doctored hook—simply keep a steady tension on the line, which you're supposed to do in any case.

When you finally set out you'll have one advantage over most anglers: beginner's luck. There really is such a thing, and I suspect I know why: The beginner does something wrong, which a fish happens to think is right. For example, a child may not notice his worm is lying on the bottom and may occasionally give his rod an inadvertent twitch—a technique that his elders only recently learned is an excellent way to catch bass. Jim Deren guffaws over how inept his wife was the first time he took her fishing: "Would you believe it, she even cranked the handle backward, tangled the line and got caught on the bottom." Except the bottom was a four-pound bass.

Such fish stories are no small part of the sport's attraction. For example, everyone remembers the first fish he caught—mine was a three-inch sunnie on a bare hook that I accidentally dangled off a dock in the Adirondacks. Keith Gardner, the editor of Fishing World, has never looked back since the day he caught more walleyes than his parents on a lake in northern Iowa: "I found there was something I was better at than they were—a big step in growing up."

So give it a try. At dawn, as the night mists burn off, row around the edge of a mirror-calm lake, casting in to the lily pads, waiting for the explosive splash of a bass taking your surface plug. Sit on an old wooden dock in the sun and share the excitement of a youngster as the bobber is pulled under. Or at sunset, when bass and pickeral come into shallow water to feed, cast out from the shore.

And if you find you're looking forward to your next chance to go fishing with quiet excitement, if you are magnetically drawn into every tackle shop you pass, you'll know that it's not just the fish that is hooked.

Some 61 million Americans admit they go fishing occasionally, and several million of them are hopeless addicts. If you are considering joining that group this summer, most likely at the urging of your young, you can use some avuncular advice.

First, it is only fair to warn, fishing is not a sport to be tried out lightly. It can lead to a man's deserting the marital bed in the dark of a cold April morning; it has turned persons into liars. It can, and frequently does, become an obsession: Leonard Wright Jr., the fly-fishing authority, once gave up a perfectly good advertising job in Manhattan largely so he could have a glorious year of fishing for trout and salmon in Europe. My favorite uncle had to pop a nitroglycerin pill for his angina every time he caught a small-mouth bass, and he never even considered giving up the sport.

Obviously fishing has its rewards. For one, it is done out of doors, usually in the pleasantest of scenery. Other fishermen you encounter tend to be quiet and comradely—although a bit vague as to exactly where they caught that big bass. And finally, if you are a true fisherman, there is a unique excitement in seeing your float duck under, or your fly disappear—even when you know perfectly well that the bait is being attacked by a four-inch sunfish. Some people get that thrill, and the remainder are bored even while pulling in trophy-size fish. The only way to find out where you stand is to try it.

The object is to experiment with fishing at a minimum of expense and effort, so if its pleasures escape you, you can donate your tackle to the nearest barefoot boy and return to the joys of televised baseball and a six-pack. Unless you live right on salt water, I suggest you start in the nearest lake. It is easy: you are almost sure to catch something, and to my mind it will provide more of the essence of the sport than the hurly-burly of a seagoing party boat.

Like most popular vices, fishing is easy and inexpensive to get into. Buy a Fiberglas rod and a closed-face spinning reel. These come in bubble-packed kits, like almost everything except sex (and they're probably working on that). The cost of rod, reel and fishing line runs from about $8 to $13, and Johnson, Zebco and Garcia all make good outfits, available at most tackle stores. Jim Deren, doyen of New York's Angler's Roost (141 East 44th Street; tel.: 212-697-8894), offers a reel and a tubular Fiberglas rod, which is more responsive than solid Fiberglas, for under $20. Abercrombie & Fitch (Madison Avenue and 45th Street; tel.: 212-682-3600) sells a fancier rig for $40.

Spinning gear has largely done away with the bucolic scene of a fisherman on a shore or pier simply dangling a line in the water, but Deren recommends exactly that for the beginner. Start out," he says, "with a worm hanging under an old-fashioned bobber. You won't lose artificial lures, at a dollar or so each, and with a worm you have a better chance to catch the perch and sunfish that abound in almost every pond."

Your line should be fastened to the bobber so the hook hangs about six inches above the bottom—or above the weedbed, if there is one. (To find the bottom, let the weighted line down first—without the bobber—until it goes slack.) A cork bobber weighs enough

Exploring Vermont By Steam Train

By CHRISTINA TREE

Vermont's Bicentennial Steam Expedition is different things to different people. To dyed-in-the-wool rail fans it is America's longest scheduled steam ride: 245 miles, 13 hours round trip. To people without cars it is the first convenient way in decades to see Vermont. To our family, fresh from our days on and off the train, it proved to be a magnificent way of getting into, not just through, the Green Mountain State.

We are not rail buffs. We can hardly hold a coal from an oil-fired engine. But do like riding steam trains: the lurching motion, the whistle, the waving, the leisurely pace. And the Vermont steam train offered us the option of taking a day trip, an overnight trip, one-way trip from the bottom to day except Tuesday, clacketing along at roughly 25 miles an hour between Burlington, in the northwestern corner of the state, and Bennington in the southwest, with five stops en route. (For information on sightseeing and conducted tours, see box on Page 16.)

My husband and I came equipped for the Expedition with our 3-year-old son and our three-speed bikes (the train's baggage car is specially fitted to carry bicycles). It wasn't yet 8 A.M. on a drizzly weekday when we arrived at the Bellows Falls station to board the train, but a crowd had already formed to see it. The first blast of its whistle up the valley generated grins all around, and the actual arrival of the engine, hissing loudly as it backed into the station across a narrow iron bridge was loudly cheered. Even Andy Barbera, the train's 78-year-old engineer, was waving excitedly.

Once under way, at 8:15, we found the Vermont landscape, sliding by through the open windows, more fragrant than it had ever been through a car windshield. At one point a startled chipmunk scurried right by my nose along an embankment where wildflowers had just been showered with cinders. Cows raced away at the sound of the engine's toot and factory workers along the route hung from windows, waving.

There was a host or hostess assigned to each car, but they, like all of us passengers, kept lurching back and forth the length of the train, to hold sociable discussions on what amounted to a shared happening. Most of the young staffers, we found, were recent college graduates. Vermonters who were grateful to have obtained a job within their own state. Hostess Elka Fay, descended from the owner of the Catamount Tavern in Bennington (the most famous Revolutionary-era rallying point for Ethan Allen's Green Mountain Boys), was fresh from Manhattan where she had clerked in Macy's candy department.

It was during these peregrinations up and down the aisles that we learned that engineer Barbera was a veteran of 52 years with the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad and 10 with Steamtown USA, a nonprofit rail museum two miles north of Bellows Falls managed by his son, Robert. Barbera and the other crew members on the Expedition train number less than 20 but together they represent 1,000 years of railroading experience.

"Takes old men to run old trains," said maintenance chief Bill Sprinkle of Morrisville, N.C., his Lee overalls and grandfatherly face coated with a film of lubricating oil. He appeared to be happy. So did the elderly, impeccably uniformed conductor and two trainmen. Also the half-dozen young staffers dressed in striped railroading caps and aprons.

Steamtown USA supplied the rolling stock and crew for the Expedition train, Sprinkle explained, and when it placed an ad in the railroad trade publication Locomotive Engineer, last spring, reading, "Experienced steam locomotive engineers and firemen wanted," some 300 retired men from Maine to California applied for the four openings.

"For people without cars, it's the first convenient way in decades to see Vermont," the author says. The 245-mile round trip takes 13 hours, but passengers can lay over at any stop. Engineer Andy Barbera, 78, and the rest of the crew have a total of 1,000 years of experience. "It takes old men to run old trains," comments one.

Three hours after leaving Bellows Falls, the Spirit of Ethan Allen snorted into Rutland and spent a half-hour taking on water and switching from the tracks of the Green Mountain Railroad to those of the Vermont Railway. There was not quite time enough for a walk up Center Street to Main Street Park, but, actually, Vermont's second largest city looked less than inviting from the train. All that we could see was the backside of a shopping center occupying the site of the former Rutland Railroad station. The train, hissing clouds of white steam, seemed to be the best show in town.

In Proctor, just north of Rutland, we eased slowly past a loading platform at the Vermont Marble Company, then picked up speed through the open rolling farmland, stopping briefly at Brandon and Middlebury. Both of these towns, too, seemed to have turned their backs to the tracks, and passengers who did not leave the train got no hint of their exceptionally handsome greens. We found that Burlington, Vermont's largest city, which we reached at 2 P.M., runs literally downhill—from the extravagant turrets and towers of the University of Vermont campus past large Victorian homes to the shopping area, the oil tanks, the train tracks and the old warehouses that urban renewal has spared along the banks of Lake Champlain. The city, we discovered when we alighted from the train, is entirely unsuited to exploration by bikes equipped with less than five gears, and to add to our discomfort in pushing up, up and up Mair Street to Miss Burke's Guest House, it started to rain heavily.

We must have looked disreputable, sodden and begrimed with cinders and bicycle grease, and even after a wash and change of clothes we were regarded with suspicion by the staff at Henry's Diner; the woman at the cash register pounced on my husband as he picked up our bottle of vitamins on leaving, accusing him of stealing a salt shaker.

For train passengers who want to explore the city, there is frequent bus service into town to view, among other things, the fine historical exhibits at the city's Fleming Museum (open Monday through Saturday from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. and on Sundays from 1 to 5). One exhibit is called "The Centennial Decades: 1860-1900" and the other is "Images of the Vermont Landscape: 1776-1976," and both will be on view through the foliage season in October.

We had planned to pedal the seven miles south from Burlington to the Shelburne Museum, a collection of hundreds of items made in America from the 17th to 19th centuries, ranging from apple corers to a lighthouse and steamboat. But we opted instead for a ride aboard the lake cruiser Champlain and found it an ideal way to appreciate the genuine majesty of the lake, walled as it is between the Green Mountains and the Adirondacks.

Back on the train, we left Burlington southbound at 4 P.M., arriving at Middlebury an hour and a half later. We had arranged to spend the night there and, exhausted, we headed for our room in Porter House, a turn-of-the-century mansion that is now an inexpensive annex to the Middlebury Inn, that unstuffy gracious presence which dominates the upper edge of one of New England's handsomest greens.

Middlebury is far more prosperous looking than most Vermont towns. It has been a college community since 1800 (Middlebury College was founded

Once the crew was assembled, nine vintage 1920 passenger cars from the Long Island Rail Road were put into service after being entirely rebuilt, sandblasted and hand-scraped, their natural woods restored, every window repaired or replaced, their seats covered in rich maroon and their walls painted a pleasant cream. After that, makeshift stations seemed to materialize all along the route, every one with wooden canopies, benches, information booths and ticket offices.

The bar car was named after the historic Catamount Tavern and the dining car after the Cephas Kent Inn in Dorset, where the idea of creating the state of Vermont was first suggested.

We found the food aboard adequate if not exactly gourmet. Breakfast was a Danish or a "McChooChoo" (egg and ham on an English muffin), lunch a "make-your-own sandwich" (a lengthy but eventually satisfying procedure) and dinners were ample and hot, consumed at wooden tables decorated with wildflowers.

Worse Than Jaws or Bear Claws Is the Serpent's Tooth

regions. Its red-yellow-black coloring is similar to that of such harmless species as the scarlet and scarlet milk snakes. But the arrangement — in which the broad black and red bands are separated by narrow bands of yellow — is quite different, and so is this reptile's potential for harm. A member of the family Elapidae, which includes such unpleasant relatives as the Indian cobras and kraits, the coral snake boasts a venom that is neurotoxic, capable of acting on the nervous system and paralyzing the muscles of respiration, which might lead to respiratory failure. Fortunately for man, it lacks a good system for delivering this knockout punch. With its small mouth, the coral cannot strike like a rattlesnake; instead, it must bite its victim and chew for a moment or two in order to inject its venom. A hiker, therefore, faces little risk from a coral snake unless he tries to pick one up.

Anyone who spends any amount of time outdoors is likely at some point to see pit vipers, members of the family Crotalidae. They get their name from the depression or "pit" found on either side of their heads just behind the nostrils. The pit is a heat-detecting organ that senses the presence of warm-blooded prey in the dark and guides the direction of the strike. Pit vipers possess venoms that are hemotoxic, capable of acting on the circulatory and hematological systems, where they can cause a lowering of blood pressure, bleeding, blood clotting and destruction of red blood cells and blood vessels. Pit vipers have an excellent system for delivering their toxins, which consist of proteins and various enzymes. Unlike the corals and cobras, which have small, fixed fangs, Crotalid snakes have long, folding fangs that are as sharp as hypodermic needles. They can also strike quickly, injecting up to a teaspoonful of venom in a fraction of a second.

The least offensive of the American pit vipers are the copperheads, found from Texas to the Atlantic and as far north as central Illinois and Massachusetts. Coppery brown in color, with darker, hourglass-shaped markings, and averaging about 30 inches in length, copperheads prefer dry upland woods, slithering through the leaves that cover the floors of forests in the Blue Ridge, the Georgia highlands and the Poconos. They can be found on rocky hillsides and mountains in the spring and fall, down in lowland areas (where they feed on rodents and frogs) in warmer weather. Deaths from copperhead bites are relatively rare, since these snakes generally strike only when touched or stepped on — and their venom is considerably less toxic than the coral's.

Cottonmouth moccasins, also pit vipers, are common throughout southern coastal regions and the Mississippi Delta. Averaging a little over three feet in length, these heavy-bodied brown snakes can generally be found in swampy areas like the Okefenokee and the Everglades, where they live on small aquatic animals and sun themselves on rocks and branches near the water's edge. They are easily recognized when they open their mouths, which they do when alarmed. As the snake's name suggests, the inside of its mouth is a startling white.

The real threat to the hiker, fisherman or camper, however, is the rattlesnake, a pit viper of which there are some 30 species. The most uniquely American of snakes—no other snakes anywhere possess the rattle—rattlesnakes were first described around 1550 by a Spanish explorer who said simply: "If they bite a man, they kill him." Since then, stories about the snakes and their abilities have been embellished and expanded enough to make the creature a genuine American monster, a sort of New World version of St. George's dragon. Legends about rattlers hold that the reptiles travel in pairs and tell how a hunter has killed one only to be pursued and bitten by its mate. They credit the creature with the ability to mesmerize small animals like rabbits and mice.

Most of the folk tales about rattlesnakes are patently untrue. Snakes are solitary creatures and do not avenge each other's deaths. Killing primarily to eat, they do not, as a rule, strike at animals larger than they can swallow. Interested primarily in being left alone, they do not pursue humans. Nor do rattlesnakes reveal their ages by the number of rings on their tails. The snakes add a ring each time they shed their skin, which may be as often as three times a year for young snakes, once a year or not at all for older snakes, and they frequently break off and lose older rattles.

Rattles do rattle their rings to tell other animals and humans when they are getting too close (not for nothing did American Revolutionaries use a rattlesnake and the legend, "Don't tread on me," as a device for a flag), but they are just as likely to strike without warning.

Rattles are not nearly as big as many people say they are. The longest recorded specimen of an eastern diamondback, a native of the Southeast and the largest of the rattlers, measured 8 feet 9 inches. But even a small rattlesnake is big enough: its venom, buffered by some two dozen enzymes, is more toxic than that of either the copperhead or the cottonmouth. According to toxicologists, rattlesnake venom is at least as poisonous as the toxin of the Amanita mushrooms and considerably more potent, dose for dose, than sodium cyanide. The effectiveness of rattlesnake venom depends upon such things as the dose (most rattlers discharge between 25 percent and 75 percent of their venom with each bite), the site of the bite (the closer it is to the trunk, the more urgent is the need for treatment), the age and size of the rattlesnake (older or larger rattlesnakes have more venom and longer fangs, which penetrate deeper) as well as the rattlesnake species (some are more lethal than others). In any case, the poison is powerful. A good dose of rattlesnake venom can kill a 200-pound man in an hour if he gets no treatment, take the life of an untreated child or an adult of slight build in much less time.

Rattlesnakes, whose heads are always being shot off in Western movies by quick-drawing cowboys intent upon rescuing bankers' daughters whose horses the reptiles have just panicked, are generally regarded as a menace only in the Southwest. But one need not go to Texas, Arizona or New Mexico to find—or be bitten by—a rattlesnake. Rattlesnakes inhabit every state except Alaska and Maine (where the weather is too cool). Delaware (where their welcome absence has yet to be adequately explained) and Hawaii. Rattlesnakes can be found in California suburbs and the rolling green hills near Tanglewood in the Berkshires. They can also be found by anyone who wants to risk poking his hands into crevices in the Hudson River Palisades. Last summer, a picnicker was struck by a rattler while walking in the woods of Harriman State Park, a popular family recreation area less than 20 miles north of Manhattan.

A bite from a poisonous reptile, especially a rattler, can be excruciating. Most victims recall feeling a sharp blow accompanied by an almost instant, stinging pain. Swelling will usually start at the site of the bite—indicated by one or more fang marks—within 10 minutes, and in the absence of treatment, spread rapidly, inflating a leg to the thickness of a log in an hour. Erythema, or discoloration of the skin, and hemorrhagic blisters appear within a couple of hours. Weakness, sweating, faintness and nausea are common. Many victims of Crotalid bites report numbness or tingling of the face, lips and scalp. They also report pain—lots of it. "My leg felt as if it were on fire," recalled a young herpetologist who was bitten while handling a rattlesnake in a laboratory. "It felt like somebody was carving it up with a red hot razor blade."

First aid for snakebites is simple and has four purposes—to retard the absorption of venom, to remove the venom from the wound, to prevent or reduce its effects and to prevent complications. Professional rattlesnake hunters carry buckets of crushed ice in their trucks so they can chill a bitten limb to prevent swelling and keep the poison from spreading. Experts advise hikers, who may find such a load too much, to follow this procedure:

1. The victim should lie down and keep calm. Any hysteria or activity will increase the pulse rate, causing the blood to carry the venom more quickly to the heart. Keep the involved area below the level of the heart.

2. If the bite is on an arm or leg, apply a constricting band to keep the poison from spreading. The band should be applied within 30 minutes of the bite, be two to four inches above the wound, and should not be so tight that it cuts off arterial supply. If the swelling extends up to the band, apply another band a few inches above the first. First-aid textbooks do not generally explain what to do if the bite is on the torso or neck, but the procedure is obvious. Since a constricting band is out of the question, apply pressure on veins leading to the heart.

3. Remove the poison. Until recently, a pair of cruciform incisions across each puncture and as deep as the fangs had penetrated was considered de rigueur. Now, such slashes are not recommended by physicians. Most doctors agree that straight incisions, no more than a quarter of an inch long and an eighth of an inch deep, are sufficient. "We're interested in first aid," said one physician who has treated several rattlesnake bites. "Let's leave fancy cutting for surgeons." If you do not have a snakebite kit available, sterilize a knife blade with a flame before making the incisions. After the cuts have been made suction should be applied.

Since snake venom can be swallowed without harm, provided that there are no open cuts or sores in the mouth,

An Ounce of Prevention

Campers and backpackers can avoid accidental encounters with snakes, particularly poisonous ones, if they exercise some simple precautions. Among them:

Know snakes' habits. Being cold-blooded and dependent on external conditions, most snakes seek shade during the heat of the day, taking refuge under rocks or logs or in caves and excavations. So keep your hands and feet out of burrows or holes or other places that cannot be clearly seen. Lift large rocks or fallen trees carefully—they may conceal snakes which will resent being disturbed. Don't unroll sleeping bags near rock or rubbish piles or pitch camp close to cave entrances.

Be extra careful at night. Rattlesnakes and other pit vipers are most likely to be abroad in the dark when their ability to detect the heat of warm-blooded creatures more than compensates for their limited vision. Don't attempt to gather firewood after sundown—the stick grabbed too casually in the dark might turn out to be a wriggler.

Walk carefully. Hikers should never step over logs unless they can see what is on the other side; carry a walking stick to prod logs and rocks before stepping over them. Don't crawl under a fence in high grass without first making sure that the growth is snake-free.

Most important, leave snakes alone. Even non-poisonous snakes, like the garters, blacks and hogsnoses, can—and not infrequently will—bite if they are picked up and they cause painful infections when they do. (Bites from non-poisonous snakes should be washed carefully and treated with antiseptics just like other cuts.)

Venomous snakes are even more likely to bite if handled. It is estimated that 25 percent of all rattlesnake bites occur when people who should know better attempt to handle rattlers. People who handle snakes for a living feel that an amateur who picks up a poisonous snake is almost asking to be bitten.

I tend to agree with them, and with good reason. I did and I was. While serving with the Army in Korea, I came across a local species of venomous snake called a Mamushi, a relative of the rattler, and attempted to bring it back to show other members of my unit. Catching the snake was no problem. I pinned it to the ground with a forked stick, picked it up and held its head snugly between my thumb and forefinger. But carrying it was not as easy. As soon as I loosened my grip, the 18-inch-long snake bit me on the thumb.

More angry than frightened (Mamushi, I recalled, were considered only mildly poisonous), I hurried to the infirmary and explained what had happened. The doctor, an Oklahoma boy who had grown up with rattlesnakes in his backyard, was nothing if not efficient. He put a tourniquet around the base of my thumb, applied suction to the two tiny punctures near the tip, gave me a shot and assured me that I should suffer nothing worse than a swollen and rather painful thumb for a few days. At no point, however, did he show me any sympathy. "Anyone who plays with poisonous snakes," he said, "deserves to be bitten." —P.S.

(the death of local tissues) and gangrene. Antivenins are produced by giving gradually increasing doses of snake venom to horses and extracting the antibodies from the animals' blood serum. But treatment with antivenins is not without risk. Because so many vaccines are made in the same way as antivenins, many people have become oversensitized to horse serum and run the risk of serious allergic reactions when injected with it. Doctors must therefore test snakebite victims for allergy to horse serum before they can administer it, a process that can delay treatment.

This problem may soon be overcome, however. Three Utah researchers—Richard Straight and J. L. Glenn of the Salt Lake City Veterans Administration Hospital and C. C. Snyder of the University of Utah—recently reported in the British scientific journal Nature that it may be possible to use rattlesnake blood as a source of antivenin. The trio has found that rattlesnake blood contains protein factors that neutralize the toxic effects of venom in mice and rats better and faster than commercial antivenins and also prevent much of the blood and tissue damage associated with rattlesnake bites.

New research and first aid training can help save lives that might otherwise be lost to snakebite. But the best way to reduce the risks of snakebite is through prevention and education.

All the elegance of the Barbados Hilton

$379.00* - 8 days, 7 nights - including air fare

Barbados Hilton American Airlines Summer Pleasure Chest

If you don't like cutting corners on luxury, but you do like cutting down on travel expenses—summer's the time to visit Barbados. And the Barbados Hilton's the place to stay.

This is your Pleasure Chest Card. It's presented to you free. And, when validated, introduces you to free gifts, services and discounts. It's the little extras that make your vacation mean more.

Barbados will charm you with its British accent, friendly Bajan smiles and the warmth and hospitality of the Barbados Hilton. Adjacent to historic Fort Charles, the Barbados Hilton reflects the fort theme with coral-stone walls, a colonnaded courtyard and vaulted ceilings. Your Pleasure Chest Card adds to the friendly atmosphere with free gifts, services and discounts.

It starts with a rum libation. Your own personalized bottle of rum to enjoy from the balcony of your air-conditioned room. A free chaise by the pool or on our expansive beach. A rum cocktail party. Free tennis and skin-diving group lessons, a sauna session.

There's deep-sea fishing, horse racing and golf nearby. Play donkey polo on the beach. Take a bicycle tour around the Savannah through winding paths and tropical gardens. Back at the hotel, enjoy entertainment every night and late-late dancing.

The per-person price is based on double occupancy without meals. But for $112.00 extra you may choose Modified American Plan which includes breakfast and dinner.

American Airlines offers 707 non-stop service from New York City.

*Air fare is individual four-basing fare effective April 15. Travel on this fare not permitted on Saturday, Sunday or Monday during July and August. Air fare is subject to change without notice and does not contain applicable taxes.

For the Barbados Hilton Pleasure Chest Holiday—just call your travel agent, Hilton Reservation Service (212) 594-4500, American Airlines or mail the coupon.

THE s.s. VEENDAM TAKES YOU TO THE HEART OF THE CARIBBEAN IN THE LAP OF LUXURY.

The s.s. Veendam is one of Holland America's world cruise ships. So it offers you the superb service and facilities of an international resort combined with the elegance and comforts of a luxury liner. (And no tipping required.) It also offers you the largest choice of Caribbean cruises from New York.

Each a vacation that begins the moment you board. With an itinerary that gives you a chance to visit some of the natural wonders of the Caribbean. Like the drive-in volcano on St. Lucia, an underwater national park near St. Thomas and the pink coral beaches of Bermuda.

In between you can drive golf balls, bask in Caribbean sunlight and starlight and rest assured the nightlife won't put you to sleep.

So don't miss a chance to see the Caribbean in a manner to which very few are accustomed. Call your travel agent or mail the coupon to Holland America Cruises. The s.s. Veendam is registered in the Netherlands Antilles.

10-DAY CARIBBEAN CRUISES

New York to San Juan, St. Thomas, St. Maarten, Bermuda. Friday sailings, now to Nov. 26. From $685 to $1,175.

The Wild White Herd Of Chillingham Castle

culty understanding his Northumbrian accent, here's a condensed version of what he'll tell you. (The complete walk, with commentary, lasts about 20 minutes.)

Uncounted centuries ago millions of bos primigenius roamed northern Europe, including the floating patch of jungle which was England. Cave paintings tell us that these savage aurochs were black, except for a white stripe that ran along the spine like a rime of snow. The druids, those mystical Celts about whom little is known but much is written, widened this stripe by a process of segregation and selective slaughter, hoping to produce an all-white animal for sacrificial purposes. Herds of wild white cattle began to multiply in the forests of Northumberland. The herds moved according to season, as far north as the Clyde estuary, and as far south as Chillingham.

Sometime in the 13th century, the Lord of Chillingham (his present-day descendant is the Earl of Tankerville) walled in the estate, entrapping one of these herds in a 365-acre corral. Although the cattle were originally kept for hunting purposes (hence their phobia for foxhounds), they have managed to survive for 700 years, remaining to this day completely and utterly wild, and uncompromisingly white.

No colored or even partly colored calf is ever born at Chillingham. The strain is not, however, albino: If you look closely, you will see soft red hair inside the ears. Eyes, muzzles, hoofs and horn-tips are black, which only serves to accentuate the whiteness of everything else. Seen in a setting of green trees and meadow, against a backdrop of pale blue Northumbrian sky, the herd is one of the most impressive natural spectacles in Britain.

There are three herds of wild cattle elsewhere in the country—at Cadzow (Scotland) and Vaynor and Dynevor (Wales)—but their whiteness, and certainly their wildness, does not compare with the Chillingham strain. Seven centuries of inbreeding have had no physical effect upon the herd, although they are a little smaller than they used to be. Even so, the cows weigh about 780 pounds, the bulls 1,100 pounds or more. Their hides shine—one is tempted to say shimmer—with health, their backs are straight, their horns curve in graceful crescents. In reflexes and agility, they make domestic cattle seem positively sluggish—one cow has been known to make a standing jump of six feet.

Although the herd, which currently numbers 59 animals, is just a vestige of the past, it is by no means dying out. The nearest it got to that was in 1760, when an epidemic reduced it to a total of one cow. Fortunately she was in calf, and even more fortunately the calf turned out to be a bull, so with the help of a little natural incest the herd began to grow again. The other dangerous time was more recently—in 1947, when England experienced one of the longest and bitterest winters in history. Incessant snow and North Sea winds killed 20 of the then total of 33 cattle, and the 13 survivors were all in their dotage. For one and a half years no calf was born; finally, thanks to the sterling efforts of an aged bull, one was conceived in the autumn of 1949.

It certainly seems that nature is on the side of these extraordinary creatures. Foot-and-mouth plagues miraculously pass them by. About the only human attention they need is the provision of hay during the winter. Even then it must be supplied as unobtrusively as possible. When the winter of 1947 reduced them to the point of utter starvation, they refused to touch anything left out for them until the boxes were taken away.

Occasional astonishing bursts of violence remind their "keepers" that the cattle still live by the law of the jungle. Suddenly, and for no apparent reason, one bull will turn upon another; with a single swipe of the horns all the victim's thoracic organs will be reduced to pulp. Death comes within seconds.

Only the strongest bull can fight his way to the leadership of the herd, and only he, as king bull, has the privilege of serving the cows. Sick or wounded animals are ruthlessly expelled, and so is the king bull if he is ever defeated in battle. Should he reappear, and absent-mindedly mount one of the cows, he will be killed on the spot.

The last time anybody dared to treat the Wild White Cattle as fair game was in October, 1872, when the Prince of Wales (later Edward VII) visited Chillingham Estate and decided to give chase. A "shoot" was duly arranged by the keepers.

The Prince, as befitted his royal status, assumed the honor of killing the king bull. Fearlessly mounted on his shooting pony, he was escorted to a shed just inside the park, where a cart loaded with bales of hay awaited him. Here he dismounted and was assisted—with some difficulty, since he was very fat—onto the haycart. Grooms completely surrounded him with the bales, and the keepers went off to entice the leader of the herd within range.

Hours went by, while His Royal Highness sweated patiently in the hay. Finally, the keepers managed to coax the king bull into point-blank range, whereupon the Prince arose from his camouflage, and shot him between the eyes. He posed triumphantly beside his dead victim (for an illustrated booklet, subsequently published) and was presented with the head as a souvenir. Generously, he distributed the rest of the carcass, which amounted to half a ton of the toughest beef in England, among "the deserving poor."

If You Go . . .

. . . to Chillingham you'll find the herd at Chillingham Park, an estate consisting of 260 acres of grass and bracken and 105 of woodland. The park is open daily, except Tuesday, from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. and on Sunday from 2 to 5 P.M.

Northumberland, one of the least-known and most sparsely populated counties in England, is, in spite of its grim North Sea reputation, attractively lush and open. The Vikings, too, found it tempting, for Lindisfarne, on the coast about 15 miles northeast of Chillingham, was the first part of Britain they chose to maraud, and they returned again and again.

Lindisfarne, now known as "Holy Island," is linked to the craggy coast by a thin spit of golden sand (a causeway admits cars at low tide). Its high ruined castle has horizon-filling views of the North Sea, enabling the visitor to feel total disorientation from the world. East of Chillingham, towering over one of the county's fine beaches, is Bamburgh Castle, grandest of Britain's coastal strongholds. Sir Lancelot and Queen Guinevere are said to have spent their first illicit weekend here. In Bamburgh village, lifeboat fans can visit the grave of Grace Darling (1815-1842), the "Lighthouse Girl" who assisted in many North Sea rescues. A museum nearby contains her boat and belongings.

Connoisseurs of architecture should not miss the awesome mansion of Seaton Delaval, between Seaton Sluice and a particularly bleak stretch of coastline. Huge, black and weatherbeaten, it is one of the lesser-known masterpieces of Sir John Vanburgh, the designer of Blenheim Palace. Medieval banquets are held here weekly throughout the year. But by far the most majestic ruin in Northumbria is the Roman wall, built by the Emperor Hadrian in A.D. 122 to keep his colony free of Scots. There is nothing like this craggy, 73-mile fortification (softened now, with thick green turf) anywhere else in Europe.

There are three inns in Wooler, near Chillingham: the Black Bull, Rycroft and Tankerville Arms, which charge from about $5 to $10.50 for a fairly comfortable, but by no means luxurious room with bath. I would suggest you stay over in Newcastle or Blanchland. Northumbria's most charming inn (although you have only four chances in 14 of getting a room with bath) is the Lord Crewe Arms in Blanchland, not far south of the wall between Hexham and Durham. Rates start at about $10 single, but you may find yourself sharing your room with a poltergeist. The inn is, according to expert testimony, haunted.—E.M.

WHERE DO YOU LOOK FOR HOUSES, APARTMENTS, ACREAGE, LEISURE HOMES?

In The New York Times, of course.

In the Classified pages every day of the week.

In the Friday REAL ESTATE MARKETPLACE directory (appearing in the real estate display advertising columns preceding Classified).

In the Sunday Real Estate section, both classified and display advertising.

You'll find a bigger selection of residential real estate in The Times than in any other newspaper in the New York area.

The new Cunard Countess. Can any other ship offer as much?

Can you find a newer ship for your Caribbean cruise?

Because she's brand-new, the Cunard Countess has exclusive features no other popularly priced cruise ship can match. Like her "suspended" decks which absorb noise and vibration. More and bigger public rooms. More open deck space with a glamorous Lido/Pool area. Plus 4 bars, 3 nightclubs, casino, cinema, sauna, shopping arcade and a restaurant in the sky. Not to mention "suites" for all.

Can you find another ship that gives every passenger a "suite"?

Perhaps the single most unique feature of the new Cunard Countess is her one-room "suites." In seconds each bed slips out of sight. In its place is an upholstered sofa. Suddenly, your bedroom is a living room and you're ready for entertaining. If you like living in a "suite," sail the Cunard Countess.

A "suite" on the Cunard Countess. At the top is your stateroom by day. Below, the same stateroom by night.

Can you find a 7-day itinerary that offers more ports including South America?

The Cunard Countess has the best itinerary. You'll go all the way to South America with stops at Caracas (La Guaira), Venezuela; Grenada; Barbados; St. Lucia; St. Thomas; and San Juan. No Miami-based one-week cruise offers as much.

Can you find so much value for your dollar?

Two "rooms" for the price of one. More outside cabins at a better price than comparable rooms on competitive ships. Even minimum-priced rooms are a special value. Best itinerary in the Caribbean. And service in the 136-year Cunard tradition. It all adds up.

This great value sails every Saturday from San Juan. Rates include round-trip jet air fare, four superb meals daily and all entertainment aboard, port taxes and transfer between San Juan airport and the ship. Fly/cruise rates are only $550-$920*. Per person, double occupancy. See your travel agent, call Cunard/GWV Travel, Inc. at (212) 983-2510 or mail the coupon below.

TWO WEEKS TO SPARE! You can leave the ship for a week at Cunard's lovely Hotel La Toc on St. Lucia or the Paradise Beach Hotel on Barbados. The Cunard Countess will pick you up the following week. Two-week fly/cruise/resort package: $770-$1,010*. Per person, double occupancy. (Meals extra at resort.)

by a pious Yale president to offset what he regarded as the Godless state university which atheist Ira Allen had helped establish nine years previously). Thanks to the Otter Creek Falls, Middlebury was also the site of the state's first textile mills and marble quarries. By 1830 it was the biggest town in Vermont (today it ranks 14th).

Frog Hollow, (Monday-Saturday, 10 A.M. to 5 P.M., free), Vermont's official state craft center, now occupies one former mill building at the base of the falls; it displays the work of 200 of the state's most-respected craftsmen. Up the street a few doors away stands the Sheldon Museum, a three-story 1920's brick home filled with clocks, pianos, books, portraits by itinerant artists and an astounding variety of everyday items collected by energetic bachelor Henry Sheldon. The museum, founded in 1882, is open Monday to Saturday from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M.; $1 for adults, 50 cents for children.

Middlebury, we discovered, also has excellent shops and restaurants. Without meaning to, we stayed two days, spending the second night at the Waybury Inn at the base of Breadloaf Mountain.

Reboarding the train on the run south after two days away was like attending a warm reunion, and we availed ourselves of the opportunity to pick up some background information on the Expedition from the crew members. Among other things, we learned that Vermonters were not only skeptical as to whether the train would run next summer but they were surprised that the Steam Expedition had ever got rolling at all. The project we were told, was conceived three years ago by Robert Burley, an architect from Waitsfield, Vt., as part of an ambitious "Historic 1876 Transportation System." This would have included flat boats on the Connecticut River, a steamboat plying the length of Lake Champlain and two daily trains stopping at 22 towns along a route that would have utilized all 729 miles of track in the state except the Rutland-to-Burlington stretch, ironically the only segment the current train traverses all season. Burley's proposal came during the gasoline crisis and the Vermont Bicentennial Commission took it seriously. But despite a hefty chunk of Federal aid, most Vermonters still believe that their state is lavishing too much money on the train. To placate them, a total round-trip ticket was reduced to $9 for residents (as compared with the $31.50 charged out-of-staters) but even with the cut-rate fares the train has usually continued to run only three-quarters full. To us, even at the out-of-staters' fare, it seemed a bargain.

If You Go . . .

. . . to Vermont with the intention of participating in the Bicentennial Steam Expedition, be aware that the train's itinerary was reversed in mid-August and the timetable now reads: Burlington (8:30 A.M.), Shelburne (8:45), Middlebury (9:50), Brandon (10:25), Rutland (11:10), Manchester (12:35 P.M.) and Bennington (2 P.M.). The train leaves Bennington again at 4 P.M., arriving back at Burlington at 9:30 P.M. A printed timetable giving fares for the various legs is available from Steam Train, Montpelier, Vt. 05602, and reservations can be made at the same address or by calling 802-828-2236.

The price of a typical short jaunt, say, from Bennington to Manchester is $2.50, and from Manchester to Rutland it is $4.25. Children 12 and under pay half-fare and those 5 and under ride free.

Out-of-staters can build an entire vacation around the Expedition, buying a round-trip ticket for $31.50 and using it over a number of days or weeks to explore in depth the cities and towns along the route by bike, on foot, by local tour bus and taxi. In line with this, several innkeepers along the route have teamed up to offer "A Steam Train Excursion to Vermont Country Inns," a six-day vacation priced at $158 per person and including two meals daily, lodging, a train ticket and transfers. For details, write the Churchill House, RFD, Brandon, Vt. 05733.

From New York City seven buses (Greyhound and Vermont Transit) leave daily for Bennington, the southern terminus of the steam train, and the fare for the four-and-a-half-hour trip is $13.80 one-way. Tour buses meet the train at several points along the route, and the Expedition brochure lists sightseeing attractions at each of the stops.

In Brandon, there is a summer theater company that offers daytime productions for children and evening ones for adults in the Town Hall ("Godspell," Aug. 26-29 and Sept. 2-5; $2.50 weeknights, $3.50 Friday and Saturday).

In Middlebury the M&M Taxi Service meets every train and offers passengers a tour ($4.50 per car) which includes a drive around the college campus or Morgan Horse Farm in Weybridge, two miles to the north of town.

Bennington is the site of the 1806 First Congregational Church (in whose graveyard Robert Frost is buried) and nearby is the 306-foot-high monument which marks the Revolutionary era arsenal in Old Bennington. The actual Battle of Bennington was fought eight miles away, two miles over the New York line; a "Stagecoach Trip" from the monument (open daily from 9 A.M. to 6 P.M.) to see the actual site is now being offered several times daily; it takes one hour and 15 minutes and costs $2.95. Train passengers will find taxis waiting at the station (now the B & R Restaurant) which will take them to the Bennington Museum (open from 9 A.M. to 6 P.M. daily; $1.50 for adults, 50 cents for children), on to the church and back downtown for $1.25 per person.

Manchester is the home of the Southern Vermont Art Center (open Tuesday-Saturday from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M., Sundays from 1 to 5; admission is 50 cents).

Taxis meet the train and offer tours of the town for $1.50. Manchester's major Bicentennial project is a series of quiet walkways along the Battenkill River.

For a list of accommodations and sites to see in Burlington, write the Lake Champlain Chamber of Commerce, Box 453, 131 Main Street, Burlington, Vt. 05401. For specially prepared brochures about sites along the route, visitors can write to the local chambers of commerce at each of the stops.

THIS MAY BE THE BEST VACATION VALUE OF THE YEAR!

8 DAYS/7 NIGHTS INCLUDING AIR FARE FOR $207*

If you've been waiting for a chance to enjoy a great low cost holiday in the Bahamas, this is it! Delta Air Lines and American Express have come up with a late season winner—8 days/7 nights in Freeport/Lucaya on Grand Bahama Island, including air fare, for $207.

And if you want to stop over in Fort Lauderdale or Miami, you can. Leave on Delta any Tuesday through Friday between now and December 15th. Stay at either the Castaways, Shalimar or Islander hotels in Freeport/Lucaya. All are within walking distance of the fabulous El Casino and the International Bazaar. Rates are per person, double occupancy, do not include meals, transfers, local or departure tax. Other luxury hotels slightly higher.
* Free admission to Jacques Cousteau Museum.

Gaming in El Casino. 5 championship golf courses. Tennis courts everywhere. Great low cost shopping for imports. Elegant restaurants or informal dining in British pubs, French bistros, exotic native food. Miles and miles of uncrowded, sugar candy beaches. A clean, clear ocean, and some of the friendliest people you'll meet anywhere. And it is all yours for as little as $207. Call your travel agent or Delta Air Lines today. Ask for American Express IT6DL1AXGA.

FOR THE DISABLED

Two items of interest to the handicapped traveler:

(1) Flying Wheels Tours, a Midwest agency that arranges vacations for the disabled, has been granted an Interstate Commerce Commission tour broker's license to operate bus tours nationwide. It is the first organization to obtain permission to run bus tours for the handicapped on a national basis, according to Judd Jacobson, president of the agency. "The agencies that specialize in travel for the handicapped operate all their programs by air or cruise ship," says Mr. Jacobson, who is a quadriplegic. "Our license will enable us to open up a new form of interstate recreational travel at a lower price." He plans to charter standard tour coaches that will be modified with ramps and lifts to accommodate wheelchairs and to start his tours next January. Projected from New York are 10-day vacations to Florida in winter, Virginia in spring and New England and Canada in summer. The trips, which will include hotel accommodations and meals, are expected to be in the same price range as similar tours run for able-bodied people, apart for a small extra charge for attendant care for passengers who require it. Flying Wheels Tours is at 143 Bridge Street, Box 382, Owatonna, Minn. 55060 (tel.: 507-451-5005).

(2) A booklet entitled "Air Travel for the Handicapped," published by Trans World Airlines, describes the special services the airline offers. It is the first publication of its kind to be issued by an airline and it emphasizes the need for physically handicapped persons to inform the airline or their travel agent about the exact nature of their disability when reservations are made. "By having this information ahead of time, we are in a better position to arrange for pre-boarding, recommend appropriate seating or reserve a wheelchair if one is needed," says Janet Garlough, T.W.A.'s director of consumer affairs. "An increasing number of disabled persons are taking trips, and we want them to know that flying today is simple and convenient for them." Among the services described in the booklet are the free transportation of passengers' collapsible wheelchairs in an aircraft's baggage compartment and special meals for those restricted to certain diets for health reasons. Copies of "Air Travel for the Handicapped" are available free from T.W.A., 605 Third Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10016.

HERE AND THERE

The Eaglepass, a bus ticket for 30 days of unlimited travel throughout Australia, has been introduced by Greyhound Coaches of Brisbane for $120. The pass can be bought only in Australia.

Stars from the New York Mets and Yankees will be on board when Holland America's Statendam leaves for Bermuda from New York Oct. 30 on a seven-day "Baseball Celebrity Cruise." Rates run from $410 to $760 a person. . . . Arthur Gerold, founder of Bucks Country Vineyards, New Hope, Pa., and Mrs. Gerold will conduct a two-week visit to the French wine country during the grape harvest. The trip, to Paris, Champagne, Burgundy and the Loire Valley, leaves New York Sept. 26 and will cost $1050 a person, including air fare, hotels, breakfasts, motorcoach transportation and wine tastings. Details from Air France, 683 Fifth Avenue, New York 10022. . . . The five-day midweek and two-day weekend tennis instruction programs at the Killington Resort in central Vermont are continuing until mid-October. The rates, $245 a person midweek and $94 for weekends, includes lodging and three meals a day. . . . Free copies of "New York State Events," which gives dates and details of activities, including horse racing and county fairs, through November, are available from the State Department of Commerce, 99 Washington Avenue, Albany, N.Y. 12245.

THE s.s. ROTTERDAM'S 1977 WORLD CRUISE FOLLOWS THE SUN AS IT CIRCLES THE EARTH

Our 19th World Cruise will also feature a tour to the People's Republic of China.

On the 18th of January, the s.s. Rotterdam will leave New York and winter behind to cruise the world on Holland America's 19th consecutive Grand Tour. (It sails from Port Everglades, Florida, January 20th.)

The 86-day voyage will bring you to 16 ports in 13 countries via a relaxing warm-weather route. So you'll enjoy the glorious sun of Rio de Janeiro and Acapulco and the glorious spectacle of the Taj Mahal and Mt. Fuji. And you'll visit Bombay and Mombasa, South Africa and Singapore, Yokohama and Hong Kong and more.

There's even a 3-day tour to Kwangchow (Canton) in the People's Republic of China during the ship's 4-day stay in Hong Kong.

And as you cruise, you'll live in a manner to which very few are accustomed. For the s.s. Rotterdam is truly a luxurious international resort built to cruise the world in uncompromising grandeur. So you'll relax in a spacious cabin with all the comforts of home. Dine elegantly on gourmet cuisine featuring freshly prepared specialties of the lands you visit. And enjoy a world of leisure at your beck and call while the world sails right up to you.

So join Holland America and see the world with the world's most experienced world cruise line. For information, consult your travel agent or Holland America Cruises, Dept. L., Two Penn Plaza, New York, NY 10001. Or call (212) 760-3880.

The s.s. Rotterdam is registered in the Netherlands Antilles.

THIS WINTER, HOLLAND AMERICA'S NON-STOP VACATIONS GET YOU OFF THE GROUND WITH A FREE FLIGHT TO MIAMI.

If you'd like to take flight from winter this year, Holland America is offering free airfare to Miami with free transfers from the airport to your s.s. Statendam cruise.

And there's no better way to cruise than on Holland America's s.s. Statendam.

Unlike the usual Florida cruise ships, the Statendam is a true luxury liner with plenty of room for you to luxuriate in. And only Holland America offers you a complete breakfast and lunch out by the pool or in the dining room daily. Plus a choice of mealtimes most convenient for you. And no tipping required.

What's more, the greatest vacation spots in the Caribbean will be within walking distance. You can have a look at the drive-in volcano on St. Lucia, swim in the underwater national park near St. Thomas, visit the year 976 on the San Blas Islands. Even have a look at South America's Andes from Caracas' Mt. Avila.

All with the elegant service and experience of a cruise line that began cruising the Caribbean before most cruise lines even began.

So when you compare fly and cruise vacations, make sure you compare the deal on the cruise as well as the deal on the flight. Call your travel agent or Holland America Cruises at (212) 760-3880. Or mail the coupon. The s.s. Statendam is registered in the Netherlands Antilles.

THE MOST EXCITING 7-DAY LUXURY CRUISES GOING!

Sitmar's popular 7-day cruises offer you the best of Mexico or the Caribbean:

In Mexico, you'll browse the marketplace in Mazatlan, tour Puerto Vallarta and cruise picturesque Cabo San Lucas.

In the Caribbean you can savor the cultural diversity of Haiti, Puerto Rico, St. Maarten, St. Thomas and the Bahamas.

And you'll cruise in luxury aboard one of Sitmar's magnificent twin Liberian-registered ships, the T.S.S.

Fairsea or T.S.S. Fairwind. You'll be pampered by a 500-man Italian crew, enjoy lavish continental cuisine, and be regally entertained.

What's more, with Sitmar's Air/Sea Program from New York, you'll enjoy substantial savings over buying your cruise and full-fare roundtrip coach air tickets separately. You'll save $206 on a Mexican Riviera cruise sailing from Los Angeles, and $116 on a Caribbean cruise sailing from Port Everglades, Florida. You'll fly aboard regularly-scheduled airlines, and in most cases, with our "Cruise Plus" feature, you'll even enjoy stopover privileges after the cruise.

There are still excellent accommodations available, so book now for a Sitmar 7-day Mexican Riviera or Caribbean cruise. Ask your travel agent. He knows.

"WITH A LAKER ROUND-TRIP TO LONDON AT $269, THE ONLY PEOPLE WHO GET THERE CHEAPER ARE MY PILOTS." —Freddie Laker

If anybody knows about getting to London cheaper, it's Freddie Laker. This year alone, his big, wide-bodied DC-10s have flown over 180,000 travelers across the Atlantic.

All for hundreds of dollars less than other airlines' so-called "regular economy" fares.

To take a Laker to London, you buy your ticket 65 days ahead of time, and plan to stay at least 10 days abroad.

And your $269 Laker ticket includes meals, wine, drinks, stereo, motion pictures, and one thing more:

The knowledge that with all the cash you've saved with Laker, you'll be able to spend more on the ground—in England.

So send us the coupon for full information today, or drop by your travel agent's.

Unless, of course, you happen to be a Laker pilot.

(Note. Minimum airfare is for a full flight and already includes a $70 service charge. If all seats aren't sold, price may go up 20% to a maximum $322.80, but no higher. If price increased any more, flight's cancelled at least 45 days before takeoff, and you get a full refund.)

Introducing

Hotels on Wheels

The newest way to see Europe since the car.

Seeing Europe used to mean either being pre-packaged as a group, or striking out on your own by plane, train and car. The first method was limiting, and the second was often expensive. Obviously, the time had come for a third alternative.

Introducing the Tourmobile idea. It's simple: instead of checking into an ordinary hotel on arrival, you check into one of our luxurious Mercedes-Benz Tourmobiles. Then, with the help of route maps and a guide to beautiful campsites (and our own expert advice), you go where you like, when you like. The only thing decided in advance is where you pick up your Tourmobile; after that all of Europe can be your destination.

What can you expect to find aboard your Tourmobile? Absolutely everything you need for a carefree life on the road, from a kitchen equipped with the finest stainless steel fixtures, right down to Rosenthal china for the table and linens for the beds (your Tourmobile sleeps up to five adults). Interested? See your travel agent, call us toll-free anytime at (800) 223-6188, or send us the coupon below, and we'll send you a full color brochure with pictures and diagrams of a fascinating new mode of travel and fun. But don't delay—we're already accepting bookings for the busy fall vacation season. (In N.Y.C. call 695-7590.)

Tourmobile is owned and operated by General Promotion Tour A.G., Frankfurt, Germany. Exclusive U.S. representative: Travel Wide Queens Tours Inc., New York City.
